Roma Downey and Mark Burnett Present 'The Dovekeepers'

Candace Havens FYI Television, Inc.

Roma Downey ("Touched by an Angel") was fascinated by Alice Hoffman's novel "The Dovekeepers." She loved it so much she decided, with the help of her executive producer husband, Mark Burnett ("Survivor"), to turn it into a miniseries, airing Tuesday and Wednesday at 8 p.m. on CBS.

"A few years ago, I had the good fortune to read this amazing book," Downey says. "I absolutely fell in love with the story. I had been to Masada a few years ago and had been so profoundly touched by the story of a persecuted people who, in the face of that persecution, had stood up for what they believed in, where courage was greater than fear and faith and love were greater than hate and the power of sacrifice greater than war."

Downey reached out to Hoffman and was surprised to discover the rights hadn't been taken. The story is told the through the lives of two women – a healer, Shirah (Cote de Pablo), and the outcast Yael (Rachel Brosnahan) – who are being questioned by the historian Josephus (Sam Neill) about what happened to them at Masada.

"Jerusalem fell when it was sacked by the Romans, and those who survived made their way to this hilltop retreat that had been built by Herod," says Downey of Masada. "And it was kind of unreachable. And they were assured that they would be safe there. There were about 900 of them who started a new community. And our miniseries picks up the story with these women who start working in the dove coops. And the excrement of the doves is used to fertilize the soil. So, it's a very necessary part of their life there. They have a self sustaining life. They have water. They have food. And they believe that they're going to be safe to start their new lives, their new loves and their new hopes.

"Yael, played by Rachel, is out there on the edge of the fortress, and she sees in the distance a plume of smoke," continues Downey. "And at first, uncertain what it is, and then she has the awful realization that it's the Roman army that has come for them. These 900 people, thousands and thousands of men have come for them. And I think it's very hard to be at Masada and to look out, to imagine what they must have felt up there. But I think that they had to have felt that no one was ever going to be able to reach them. And so at first, you know, you'll see in our film how it's incredibly dangerous and scary, but they feel at first that they're going to be OK. And then, of course, it just turns into a nightmare."

"It's so relevant, this story," says Diego Boneta, who plays the warrior Amram. "It talks about virtues like courage and honor and love, and that's something that's going on as we speak. The freedom to speak and live the way you want. It's something we can all relate to."

Working with hundreds of birds was something new for the actresses. "We had a scene at the beginning, I think it was first or second day," de Pablo says, "and I had to release a dove. And I thought, 'Oh, my God. Well, how many takes are we going to need?' Because I thought, 'How many doves do we have?' And to my surprise, we had many doves. But then the best was when I heard that the doves would always come back. So, I wasn't so concerned that I was just sort of releasing doves, and they were just going to fly around Malta (where the movie was filmed).

"Rachel was maybe a little afraid of the doves in the beginning," continues de Pablo. "And by the end, we look over and Rachel had a dove in each hand and was walking around as if nothing was going on. She was just walking around and talking as if they were an extension of her."

Married executive producers Mark Burnett and Roma Downey were passionate about bringing "The Dovekeepers," airing Tuesday and Wednesday at 8 p.m. on CBS.

"In the book," adds Brosnahan, "I think Yael specifically has a very beautiful and deep relationship with them. And I felt by the time we got to the part where we were shooting with the doves that I actually hadn't done very much shooting with them. And they're so gentle and once you hold them properly, they just don't move. So, I was kind of, like, wandering around with a dove in each hand, like, taking selfies."

Cancer Sucks, But There is Hope

Candace Havens FYI Television, Inc.

You would be hardpressed to find a person in America who doesn't have a family member, friend or acquaintance who hasn't had to deal with cancer. The insidious disease is everywhere, but there is hope. The search for a cure has spanned centuries and continents and is thoughtfully examined in the three-part film "Cancer: The Emperor of All Maladies," premiering Monday at 8 p.m. on PBS.

Executive producer Ken Burns ("The Roosevelts: An Intimate History") and director Barak Goodman ("Frontline") have taken Dr. Siddhartha Mukherjee's Pulitzer Prize-winning book and turned it into a six-hour series showing the state of cancer today, its treatment and the ongoing research. There is science, but it's the human stories that make the documentary hit home.

"It is a hybrid of sorts that we spent a long time trying to master the narrative," Burns says. "This has very complex science which we were committed to mastering and also delivering in a way both orally and visually to a public and which we weren't going to dumb down. We weren't going to point neon signs and arrows about meaning. And that we would also complement this with these cinema vérité stories, these case stories. Just as Sid had case stories in his book, they had become history."

"Ultimately, this was about the cooperation we got from these real people going through this journey who allowed us into their lives," adds Goodman, "and we had the help, the assistance of these institutions – Johns Hopkins in particular and the Charleston Area Medical Center in West Virginia – who endorsed our project and helped broker the relationships with the patients. But these patients were, at their most vulnerable, willing to open their lives to us, and I can't express how grateful and inspired I am by those folks who, without knowing how their own stories were going to end, let us follow them. Ultimately, this was about the cooperation we got from these real people going through this journey who allowed us into their lives."

Edward Hermann ("The Good Wife," "Gilmore Girls"), who narrated the series, died in December 2014. He collapsed the first day of taping. He insisted on continuing on. Later he explained to Goodman and the team that he had terminal brain cancer. "And we decided together after a lot of soul searching and talking that we would go forward," Goodman says. "He was confident he could finish this and he could do this. It was, to him, going to be the capstone. He felt it was appropriate that this be his final project. And even while he and his wife were trying this and that treatment, I think they were reconciled to the fact that he wasn't going to make it. He did an absolutely magnificent job. I can't tell you how hard he pushed to get this done and get this done right, and his narration is terrific. He was and is such an inspiration to me as a human being, just a remarkable guy. So, we all felt privileged that he could do this."

Burns and his team hope the series will open up a dialogue. "We're really not honest with each other," Burns says. "We know about heart disease. We know about diabetes. We know about other things, but there's a kind of resistance because cancer is so scary. I don't think in the course of the four years – and I asked the questions hundreds of times – I ever met a nonprofessional who could tell me why it was called cancer, period, just the name itself, where it came from. And, you know, this is one of the first things we sort of answer in episode one."

TRIVIA CHAIN Laugh Along w/ LateNight

Classic TV's Biggest Goofballs

1. This still-syndicated sitcom was named after the goofy character in question, who was the first mate on a private cruise that should have lasted only three hours.

2. Before that actor was forever known for that role, he played on "The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis" this work-phobic beatnik, one who typically entered a conversation about something awful with his catchphrase, "You rang?"

3. Likewise, the latter of this pair of goofball buddies would say "Hello" upon barging in on the sitcom's titular gal pals as they mentioned something dreadful.

4. Barging in was the only way this "hipster doofus" would enter the apartment of his neighbor, a real-life New York comic for whom the hit sitcom was named.

5. Although completely earnest in his law-enforcement duties, this small-town Southern deputy was such a goof the sheriff would only let him carry one bullet - if any.

6. This resident of that same small town in North Carolina left his job at Wally's Filling Station to join the U.S. Marines, but his long-suffering sergeant never drilled the goofiness out of him. Golly!

7. This second-cousin of a mountain man who struck oil and moved to California parlayed his new lifestyle (and sixth-grade education) into careers as a movie producer and a double-naught spy.

Jimmy Kimmel

We have quite a show for you tonight. The leader of the free world is on the show tonight. Sean Penn is here to promote his movie "The Gunman."

President Obama is here tonight to promote a project he's been working on called the United States.

There is controversy surrounding Obama's appearance on the show. Monday we announced the president would be here. This morning I got a letter from 47 Republicans telling me not to sign any deals with him.

David Letterman

Since I announced my retirement a lot of people come up to me on the street and say, "Hey, Jimmie. I understand you're retiring. What are you going to be doing after retirement?"

I just found out today I've been accepted into the CBS page program.
