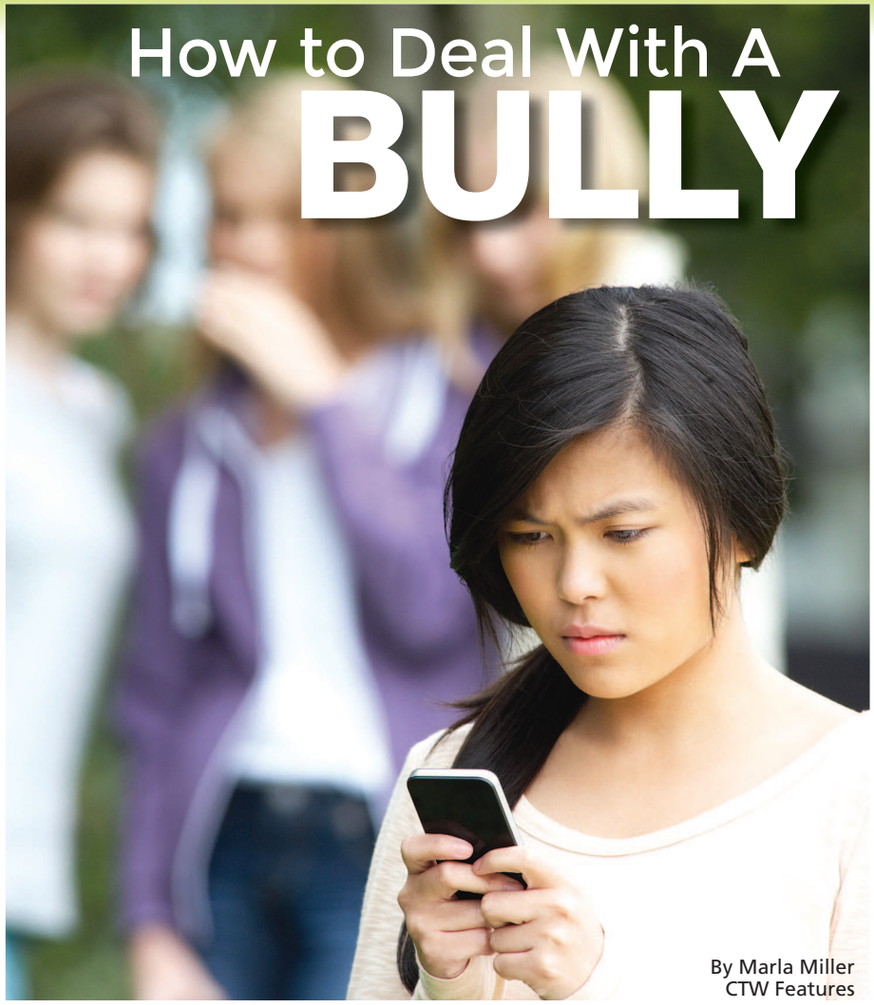
How to Deal With A BULLY



By Marla Miller
CTW Features

Bullying is a whole new frontier with the rise of the Internet and tech-savvy children, and parents have to be vigilant and proactive to prevent their children from becoming a victim.

The problem has gotten much worse due to technology, with threats and harassment often coming via text message, social media and online exploitation, along with sexual and LGBT-related intimidation.

Butte school board trustees now have an anti-bullying policy that addresses harassment due to sexual orientation or gender identity.

The policy is available on the district website at www.butte.k12.mt.us and in the student handbook, said Superintendent Judy Jonart. Also available on the website: guidelines for parents and children under "Olweus Anti-Bullying Program."

"I think it's a huge step making the Butte School District in line with the county and making Butte a more welcoming place," said former trustee Eddie Zimpel. "I'm really proud of how fast we got it done."

Anti-bullying experts report it's a pervasive problem among today's young people, resulting in more children being homeschooled and an alarming number of suicides.

"Cyberbullying is huge because they get to hide behind their online device, whether it's a cellphone, iPad, or social media and send hate messages, threats, impersonations, says Ross Ellis, a national bullying prevention expert and founder and CEO of STOMP Out Bullying. "There are all kinds of digital abuse."

What Can You Do?

Experts say parents need to be alert and assertive, but also rational when talking to their children or confronting a bully, his parents or the school.

"In general, most kids are not going to talk to their parents about this stuff, or they wait until things are really bad," says Rosalind Wiseman, an author, educator and founder of Creating a Culture of Dignity. "If you're prone to rushing in and fixing problems for them, involving parents makes things worse. The majority of kids will stop speaking to you and asking you for help because they will believe you are going to make things worse."

Wiseman and her team speak in schools and helps parents, schools and young people navigate the social challenges of young adulthood. Her website culturesofdignity.com also includes resources for parents and educators.

"You don't have to wait for a problem," she says. "You can say 'hey, you're going into fifth grade now, or ninth grade, things can get complicated, people have conflicts, let's talk about it.'"

Look for the Warning Signs

The most common signs to watch for include anxiety, depression and low self-esteem; unexplained bruises or injuries, ripped clothes or missing belongings; excessive crying or moodiness, becoming withdrawn, or a loss of interest in school; and headaches, stomachaches and other physical symptoms.

For those being bullied by peers or teachers, they may fake an illness, miss the bus or find reasons to stay home from school or be late. They may be on and off with friends, avoid school functions or experience other forms of social exclusion.

"There's always a good reason why kids do what they do," Wiseman says. "If your kid is late to school or misses the bus, they'd rather be late or you be angry than deal with what they have to on the bus. Even the most perplexing behavior, once you figure it out, it's quite reasonable."

Although there are some typical red flags parents should look for that may indicate their child is being bullied, each child is unique and may deal with bullying in their own way.

"A parent knows their child better than anyone else, especially when they get closer to middle school, they know how their child reacts day in and day out," says Lowell Levine, founder and president of the anti-bullying nonprofit Stop Bullying Now Foundation in Lake Worth, Florida. "If their grades are falling, they're not in afterschool activities, not eating properly, not able to sleep, having bad dreams or they start to get abusive, or don't want to go to school or come back home with some bruises, all of these are definite red signs that there is something going on."

Take It Seriously

Thanks to new laws, bullying is no longer considered teasing and now it's viewed as a civil rights violation, which gives more teeth to civil lawsuits, Levine says. Bullying has gotten so bad that 160,000 children miss school each day for fear of being bullied; 1.1 million drop out of high school every year; and 2 million kids are homeschooled. The grimmest statistic: According to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, suicide was the third leading cause of death among kids ages 10-14 in 2015.

Children who mention suicide should be taken to the emergency room. It's also wise for parents to find a good child psychologist, but not one associated with the school, Ellis says. Many communities have resources for families who cannot afford it.

"That's an emergency whether it's true or not," Ellis says. "Parents need to think about it, that children do commit suicide. There are copycats. You read all the time about kids committing suicide because one day they feel so bad or feel they have nowhere to turn. Get to the emergency room quickly. … Even if they're just saying it, it must be taken seriously."

STOMP Out Bullying, a national bullying and cyberbullying prevention organization for children and teens, does anti-bullying outreach in schools, has teen ambassadors and offers an online HelpChat Line that's free and confidential for young adults ages 13 to 24.

How to Talk About Bullying

Concerned parents should ask general questions or broach the subject in a nonthreatening way. One tactic is to bring it up in casual conversation and ask if bullying is a problem among their peers.

"Parents should be on the lookout for these signs, but they shouldn't go to them and say 'are you being bullied' because they're never going to say yes," Ellis says. "You might say, 'Gee I read this article, I saw this in the news, is that happening in the school?' Don't be afraid to talk about it, or let them know they can come to you. If your kid does tell you, listen carefully and let them know you love them and you're there to help them."

find their own ways to deal with peer issues, and that's developmentally normal, Wiseman says. If they know their parent tends to act rash or fly off the handle, they will shut down.

Parents may need to play a bit of detective, pay attention to their child's behavior and identify if their child has a role in the problem.

"If they're furiously texting and seem upset, or you constantly hear the blow up of the beeping, there's one indication," Wiseman says. "There's a paranoia and anxiety you can feel when kids are having this problem."

Dealing With an Cyberbully

Ellis says most social media sites require users to be at least age 13, so parents should not create an account for younger children. They should monitor their online activity and screen time and explain the ramifications of posting anything that could be damaging. Once something goes viral and the whole school sees it, or potential colleges or employers, there is not much that can be done, she says.

"They need to raise digitally savvy and responsible kids," Ellis says. "It's about constant communication. Go for a walk, go for ice cream and talk about these things, not in a parental punishing way but have a conversation.

"If your child is being cyberbullied, they first thing they should never do is respond," Ellis advises. "The Internet is like the Wild West frontier. If you see a mean post, do not respond, delete it and block the person."

Sexting and sending nude or partially nude photos has become a new issue for teenage girls. There are phone apps to hide them, and boys often distribute them to friends or online, and it can quickly ruin a girl's reputation.

"It's humiliating for the girl, and the boy doesn't care," Ellis says. "These kids who do sexting, every teenage girl wants to hear a boy loves them, but I don't care, if a boy asks you to send a nude picture, do not do it. And parents of boys should be training their boys to have respect for girls so they wouldn't even ask for that."

The key to reducing bullying is to raise healthy children with positive self-esteem and good boundaries. Parents need to take an interest in their children, their friends and their activities.

"These kids check their texts and social media 100 times a day," Ellis says. "If you find the need to check something 100 times a day, there's something in you that you don't feel good about you. Kids need to have great self-esteem. Care what you think about you. If you know you're a good person, that's all you need to know."

Steps to Prevent Bullying

Levine agrees bullying can be prevented or at least reduced if a child is involved in activities that keep them busy and build confidence, whether it's sports, theatre, music, academics or community service. He is an advocate for educating parents and grandparents on bullying awareness. When he does speak to children or mentor them, he focuses on teaching them the importance of leadership, teamwork and practice.

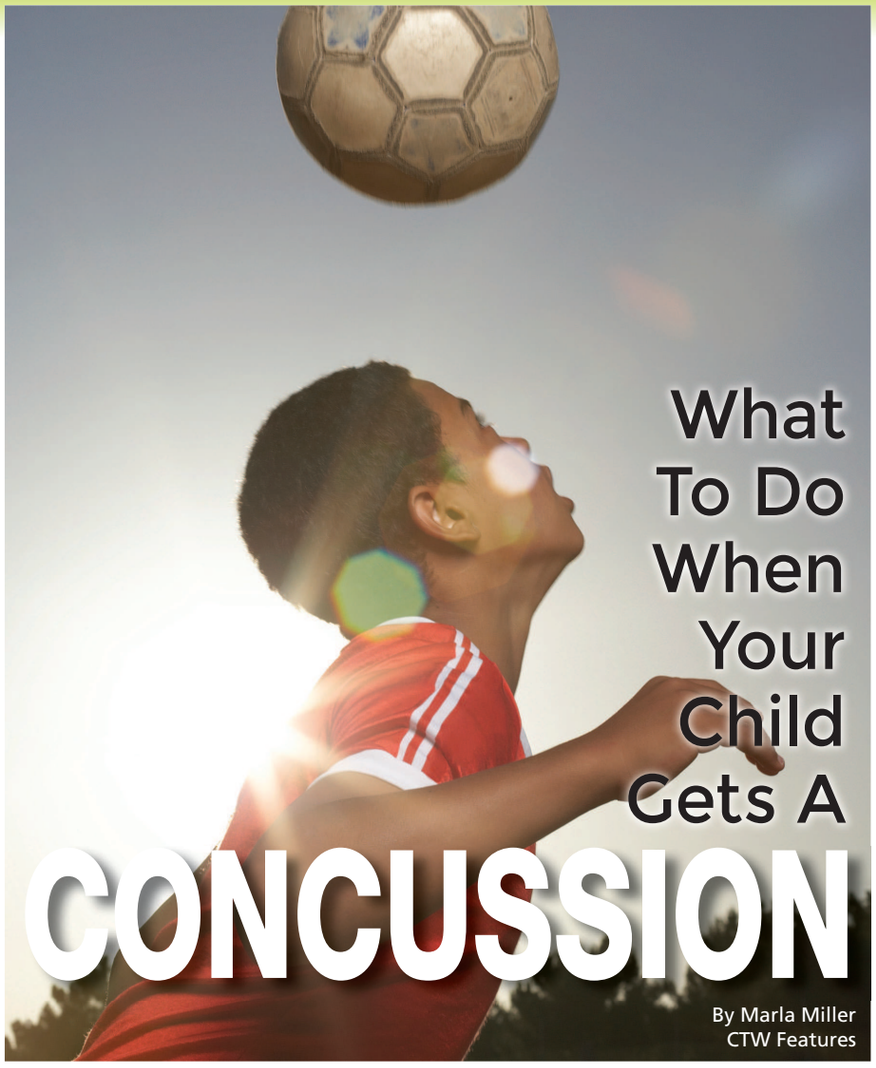
"If they understand that and apply it, they will not be victims of bullies and they won't turn into bullies," he says.

He says he works with parents and school administrators nationwide to help resolve the situation or get children switched to another school.

"When parents find me, whether they see me on television or read an article, they call me and they take charge," he says. "You have to be assertive; you're never going to get over the loss of your child. You have teach them how to be leaders, how to be strong, how to have self-esteem and self-confidence and you have to do it with the parents and the parents have to cooperate."

Both Ellis and Levine agree the worst thing a parent can do is rush into the school and start making threats or demands. In most schools, teachers and principals are not equipped to deal with bullying or they don't want to. It's best to remain calm, make an appointment with the principal, and ask how the administration can help find a solution. That may be talking to the alleged perpetrator or helping to facilitate a transfer to another school.

"If you pound your fist and say I want this child suspended or arrested, the school will shut down," Ellis says. "Don't go in like a hysterical parent because the school will shut down and won't do anything. Walk in with everything documented, dates, times, tell the principal like you're telling a story, keep it short and concise and ask 'how can you help me?'"



What To Do When Your Child Gets A CONCUSSION

By Marla Miller
CTW Features

Concussions are a type of brain injury that result from a hit to the head, neck, face or another part of the body that results in force or trauma to the brain. There is decreased blood flow to the brain, resulting in the symptoms of a concussion.

If your child exhibits the following signs, seek medical treatment immediately:

- Headaches or unexplained head pain or pressure
- Appears dazed or stunned
- Loses consciousness
- Double or blurry vision
- Dizziness or balance problems
- Irritability
- Nausea or vomiting
- Tired or excessive sleeping
- Trouble concentrating and remembering

It can be challenging to diagnose and treat a concussion because it is sometimes difficult to recognize if a player has suffered one or they may show symptoms in the days or weeks after the initial injury. Often players don't tell their coaches or parents about the symptoms because they don't think it's serious or want to keep playing.

Parents should educate themselves about concussions and be alert to changes in their child, as well as make sure they get enough rest between games, sports and sports seasons. Encourage your child to talk to you or a coach, trainer or teacher about any odd symptoms. Find out if your child's school has a concussion prevention program in place and if the coaches are trained to identify and respond to concussions and head injuries.

If your child is diagnosed with a concussion, find a good doctor or neurologist, stay in contact with the school's athletic trainer, coach and teachers, and make sure they have fully recovered before returning to play. They need adequate rest, then light exercise and sport-specific training and monitor how they are doing in class and with schoolwork.

The Butte School District posts mandatory concussion statement forms for parents and athletes on the district website, www.butte.k12.mt.us. The district follows policy 3415, "Management of Sports-Related Concussions," available on the District/Policies section of the website. The policy reads:

"The Butte School District recognizes that concussions and head injuries are commonly reported injuries in children and adolescents who participate in sports and other recreational activities. The Board acknowledges the risk of catastrophic injuries or death is significant when a concussion or head injury is not properly evaluated and managed. Therefore, all K-12 competitive sport activities in the District will be identified by the administration."

Butte abides by the Dylan Steigers Protection of Youth Athletes Act, requiring Montana schools to inform and educate student-athletes and parents of the nature and risk of concussion and head injury to student athletes, including the risks of continuing to play after concussion or head injury.

Montana law requires that each year, before starting practice for an organized activity, a student-athlete and the student-athlete's parent or legal guardian must receive an information sheet. Both parties must sign and return a form acknowledging receipt of the information to school officials prior to the student-athletes participation.

The law further states that a student-athlete suspected of sustaining a concussion or head injury in a practice or game will be removed from play at the time of injury; he or she may not return to play until the student-athlete has received a written clearance from a licensed health care provider.

SILVER BOW MONTESSORI

FIRST DAY OF SCHOOL:
TUESDAY, SEPT. 6, at 8:30 a.m.

Our purpose is to nurture independent children engaged in joyful learning. We provide high quality, authentic Montessori education that includes multi-age classrooms and hands-on learning.
The school provides early childhood education for ages 3 to kindergarten; and elementary education for grades 1-6.
Silver Bow Montessori School is located on five acres of landscaped grounds. Three main buildings accommodate the early childhood classroom, the elementary classroom, and extended uses. Llamas and chickens for the students to tend, raised gardens for children to plant, safe playground structures and swings on natural wood chips, a sledding hill, room for sports, and a shady aspen grove all contribute to an atmosphere for fun and healthy exercise.

Backpack Safety Tips for Back to School

- Wear BOTH shoulder straps to keep the weight of the backpack distributed evenly.
- Wear the backpack over the strongest mid-back muscles. Look at positioning of the backpack, and make sure it is resting evenly over the middle of the back — not hanging below the low back.
- Shoulder straps should be adjusted to allow free movement of the arms, and for the child to remove the pack easily.
- LIGHTEN THE LOAD! Keep the load at 10%-15% or less of your child's body weight. Place the heaviest items in the pack closest to the back, and carry only those items necessary for the school day.

A physical therapist can help adjust and fit a backpack properly for your child. Give us a call today!
