Crowe knows

Luke Wilson and Carla Gugino star in “Roadies”
They say you should write what you know, which is just what writer/director Cameron Crowe did when he penned the Oscar-winning screenplay for the 2000 film "Almost Famous." The semi-autobiographical drama draws from Crowe's time working as a journalist for Rolling Stone in his teens and has gained considerable acclaim.

Now, Crowe is returning to his music industry roots with his first scripted TV series, "Roadies." As the title conceivably suggests, the dramedy shines a light on a group of roadies as they accompany a big-name band around the country, setting up lights, making soundboard magic happen and generally ensuring that the show goes on. A new episode of "Roadies" airs Sunday, Aug. 7, on Showtime.

Even as a young writer, Crowe landed a lot of major interviews in his green Rolling Stone days, from his first cover story on the Allman Brothers Band to Led Zeppelin to Lynyrd Skynyrd. He credits the roadies — the crew of technicians and support personnel that travels with a band on tour — with orchestrating a lot of these behind-the-scenes meetings, and, as such, wound up spending a lot of time with them.

"Roadies" is an extension of Crowe's glimpse into that world. It's easy to see a band looking, sounding and sounding amazing, without considering the long hours, hard work and fierce dedication that goes on before and after the show to make it all happen. As Showtime touts, the show puts a spotlight on the "reckless, romantic, fun and often poignant lives" of these unsung heroes, giving a look at the music world through their eyes.

"I always fall in love with that backstage crowd," Crowe said in an interview with Entertainment Weekly. "The band is usually the least interesting group of people because they're there to work, but the other people are creating this magical spell around them."

To keep the focus on the titular roadies and their various goings-on, the fictional Staton-House Band is seldom seen and never heard. Luke Wilson ("Old School," 2003) steps away from the big screen and puts his affable persona to good use as Bill, the road-weary tour manager for the arena-level band.

Playing Bill's work-wife is Carla Gugino ("Night at the Museum," 2006) as Shell, the production manager, brains of the operation and constant fire extinguisher. The two of them have a bit of a will-they-won't-they thing going on, but Shelli is married to a guy who himself is a far-flung roadie for Taylor Swift. Nonetheless, Bill and Shelli take on the "mom and dad" role in the makeshift family made up of the rest of the ragtag crew.

This includes Kelly Ann (Imogen Poots, "Need for Speed," Oscar-winning screenplay for Crowe did when he penned the 2000 film "Almost Famous."

Robertsons entertain millions in ‘Duck Dynasty’

By Kyla Brewer
TV Media

From the Osbournes to the Kardashians, reality TV has churned out its fair share of famous families, but not all of them are created equal. While some make headlines for their outrageous spats or questionable fashion sense, another family has been staying humble in Louisiana.

Viewers who want to trade in Hollywood opulence for a little down-home southern charm can watch the Robertson family in a new episode of “Duck Dynasty,” airing Wednesday, Aug. 10, on A&E. Cameras follow their personal and professional lives as they run their sporting goods business, Duck Commander.

Willie and Korie Robertson opened this 10th season by celebrating what they thought was their 25th wedding anniversary. (As it turned out, it was actually their 24th.) They also welcomed their new adopted son, Rowdy, to the family. Other highlights of season 10 include a surprise marriage proposal in NYC and Uncle Si’s quest to fight a parking ticket. Also, Willie and Korie’s daughter Sadie considers colleges, and a big storm hits West Monroe.

Unlike a lot of reality TV families, the Robertsons’ claim to fame has nothing to do with the entertainment industry, at least initially. In fact, they made their formidable fortune selling Duck Commander duck calls and other sporting goods under the Duck Commander brand. It all started with patriarch Phil Robertson, who founded Duck Commander in 1973 and built it from the ground up. A former Washington Redskins prospect, Phil is an old-fashioned guy who dislikes modern technology. He’s married to Kay Robertson, a.k.a. Miss Kay. Phil may have created the brand, but it’s his son Willie who’s credited with transforming the family business into a multimillion-dollar empire. He has five kids with his wife, Korie, who’s also heavily featured in the series. Willie’s brother Jase oversees manufacturing at the company, while baby brother Jep is known for filming and editing the Robertsons’ duck hunts. Eldest brother Marshal “Alan” doesn’t sport the trademark Robertson beard, but the preacher is no less a part of the family.

Phil’s brother, known as Uncle Si, rounds out the cast of Robertsons. The Vietnam veteran is known for his ability to spin a yarn and his frequent use of the words “hey” and “Jack.” He’s been married to his wife, Christine, for 48 years, but she has never appeared in “Duck Dynasty.” Neither of their two children have either.

The bearded, camo-clad Robertson men have earned quite a following over the course of the show’s 10 seasons, but “Duck Dynasty” had a humble start in prime time. Spun off from a smaller OLN series, the first season of “Duck Dynasty” averaged less than two million viewers. By the fourth season, however, the show had peaked with more than nine million average viewers, thanks in part to the search engine.

The incident sparked a lot of debate and discussion among individuals and sponsors, and, on Dec. 27, A&E reinstated the patriarch, explaining that the Robertsons had expressed regret for the “coarse language.” The network then launched a public service announcement to promote unity, tolerance and acceptance among all people.

While many criticized A&E’s actions, “Duck Dynasty” has continued with Phil at the helm. Considering the sizable and almost exponential drop in ratings since the show’s heyday, it seems Phil’s remarks may have alienated some fans.

Still, “Duck Dynasty” has a loyal following and has even spawned a spinoff. Jep and his wife, Jessica, shared their experience adopting a newborn baby in “Jep and Jessica: Growing the Dynasty,” which premiered Wednesday, Jan. 20, on A&E. The debut drew more than two million viewers, but it seems to have been a flop, with no official mention of a season 2 yet.

Ratings for “Duck Dynasty” have likewise been slowly tapering off since season 4, but this milestone season has lots to offer for diehard fans of the series, who are sure to enjoy the Robertsons’ latest antics in a new episode of “Duck Dynasty,” airing Wednesday, Aug. 10, on A&E.

Roger Mooking explores cooking with fire

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

Fire. It fascinates us, it enraptures us and it defines us as humans. The scene of a group of cave men (and women!) smashing rocks or rubbing sticks together to get a few sparks is a classic in science fiction. Even the plot of this year’s “The Jungle Book” was about how fire set the humans apart from the animals of the jungle.

Chef Roger Mooking is even more fascinated by fire than most; of course, being that he’s a chef, it’s the culinary uses of the flames that he’s most interested in. So interested, in fact, that he has made a whole TV show about the stuff.

“Man Fire Food” is Mooking’s travelog, of sorts. He’s traveled all over the world to check out the weird, wonderful and inventive ways that people cook with flames. This week’s episode, airing Tuesday, Aug. 9, on Cooking Channel, follows him as he visits a pair of chefs who are reinventing the backyard rotisserie.

First, he stops by Alexander City, Alabama, where a local chef has built a unique contraption that uses fire to cook some of the most delicious and succulent legs of lamb that Mooking has ever had the pleasure of sinking his teeth into.

Then, our host is headed east, to Charleston, South Carolina. There, he’ll be exploring Cypress, a local favorite whose wood-fired food is famous around the city. It’s what’s happening outside of the kitchen that has Mooking interested, though: the restaurant’s chef has built a backyard rotisserie that can handle entire strings of ducks or chickens.

They may be inventive, but these rotisseries are far from the most creative ways of cooking with fire that the Canadian chef has come across in “Man Fire Food.” He’s experienced a meal cooked in the shell of an old airplane that’s been converted into a cooker, a whole-pig rig made out of two steel troughs wired together, and even a unique cooker that burns coal instead of wood or charcoal.

Fire sure is fascinating, and even more so when it’s used in inventive ways to make a succulent meal. Roger Mooking’s “Man Fire Food” airs Tuesdays on Cooking Channel.

A Hologram for the King
The Great Recession has hit technology sales consultant Alan Clay (Hanks) hard. He’s lost his home, his wife has left him and he’s desperate to secure a large contract so that he can start getting his life back together. He flies to the Saudi Arabian city of Jeddah, where he hopes to interest the government, which is laying the groundwork for a major new urban development, in the holographic teleconferencing system that he’s selling, with the dream of pulling his once-successful life back together.

Addicted to Fresno
Shannon (Greer) is an addict. She’s lost her job, checked herself into rehab and watched her life crumble around her. Luckily, her always-sunny sister, Martha (Lyonne), is a maid at a local hotel and manages to secure Shannon a new job. Everything starts to fall apart, though, when Shannon accidentally kills one of the hotel guests. She convinces Martha to help her ditch the body and cover up the accidental killing, but when the owners of a nearby pet cemetery catch the sisters in the act of disposing of the body, they blackmail them for money that they do not have. Shannon and Martha are forced to go on a crime spree to come up with the cash.

Director: Jamie Babbit. Stars: Judy Greer, Natasha Lyonne, Aubrey Plaza, Molly Shannon, Fred Armisen, Ron Livingston. 2015. 85 min.

Fathers & Daughters
After losing his wife in a car accident and getting seriously injured himself, Jake Davis (Crowe), an award-winning novelist, agrees to let his sister-in-law (Kruger) adopt his young daughter, Katie (Rogers). Years later, a grown-up Katie (Seyfried) is a psychology student working on her PhD, and struggles to make connections with the men in her life. When she meets Cameron (Paul), a fan of her father’s work, she tries to drive him away despite her developing feelings for him, but their new relationship may be the catalyst she needs to right things with her father.

Ken Jeong stars in “Dr. Ken”

48 Hours: Hard Evidence

TLC’s new series presents an evening of true-crime programming, beginning with this rebroadcast about breakup violence. Nathaniel and Lauren’s teenage relationship showed signs of trouble, but few imagined it would end in murder.

Dr. Ken

Dana Lee guest stars as Ken’s (Ken Jeong) dad, who shakes things up when he arrives for an impromptu stay in this rebroadcast. He takes on some chores that Ken’s (Ken Jeong) hasn’t gotten around to, such as buying and installing a much-needed dishwasher.

The Dead Files

In this new episode, Steve and Amy look into reports of distressing paranormal activity at a home in North Carolina. This series follows a self-proclaimed psychic communicator as she works with a hard-nosed detective to find evidence of the paranormal.

Crime, times three: The third season of “American Crime” will have a familiar look. The critically acclaimed ABC crime drama (which shouldn’t be confused with the similarly named “American Crime Story” on FX) is still in the planning stages for its third season, but a number of actors who have starred in the first two have signed up to make it a hat trick.

Richard Cabral (“Paranormal Activity: The Marked Ones,” 2014) is the latest to sign up for the anthology series’ third season. His performance in the show’s first installment earned him an Emmy nomination, and in the second he played a computer hacker.

Emmy winner Felicity Huffman (“Desperate Housewives”) has also signed on for a third season, along with Regina King (“The Leftovers”), who took home a Best Supporting Actress Emmy for her performance in the show’s first season. “American Crime” is one of a wave of anthology shows that have become popular in the past few years. Much like “American Horror Story,” each season of “American Crime” is self-contained, telling its own story that is not connected to the others. Although many of the same actors stay from season to season, they play different characters each time, giving them a chance to really stretch their proverbial acting muscles.

Although details of the third season’s plot are scarce, a few details have leaked out. This season of “American Crime,” which will likely premiere mid-season like the previous two, will be set in North Carolina and deal with individual rights, economic inequality and topical labor issues.

“American Crime” has never shied away from exploring some of the most explosive issues of the day, and it’s looking like the third season will be no different. Its cast of familiar faces in all new roles will likely make its debut midway through the upcoming TV season.

Back in ‘Black’: A celebrated actor is heading to the emergency room — as a doctor, not as a patient. CBS’s medical drama “Code Black” returns for a second season Wednesday, Sept. 28, and when it does, Rob Lowe will be the newest face in the ER.

Lowe earned a Best Actor nomination at this year’s Golden Globes for his role in “The Grinder,” but that’s only the latest of his numerous recognitions. Most famously, he starred in “The West Wing” during its first four seasons, a role that netted him several nominations.

After his departure from the White House drama, he’s kept busy starring in “Brothers & Sisters,” “Parks and Recreation” and lending his voice talents to the animated series “The Lion Guard.”

In “Code Black,” Lowe will play Col. Ethan Willis, a research doctor who has been brought back from Afghanistan to share with the doctors at Angels Memorial Hospital some of what the military has learned about combat medicine.

His character is described as a rule breaker with an aggressive style who has trouble fitting in with most of the other doctors in the emergency room.

“Code Black” is a medical drama set in the emergency room of the Angels Memorial Hospital, where a group of doctors and first-year medical residents not only have to deal with the constant medical issues that all emergency rooms have, but also the stress that comes from being understaffed.

The second season of “Code Black,” with new cast member Lowe, premieres Wednesday, Sept. 28, on CBS.

American beauty: The 2017 Miss America Competition is upon us, and a favorite host is returning for an eighth time. “The Bachelor” host Chris Harrison is returning to host the annual competition, which will be broadcast Sunday, Sept. 11, on ABC, from Atlantic City.

He’ll be joined by a new face this year. “NBA Countdown” commentator and ESPN regular Sage Steele will be working alongside the veteran Miss America host.

There’s always such a high level of drama and competitiveness during the Miss America Competition that rivals many sporting events that I’ve covered,” Steele said in a statement announcing this year’s hosts. “I can’t wait to host alongside Chris Harrison to see what this year brings.”

“For 96 years, Miss America has shone light on some of the brightest and most talented young women in the country,” Harrison added. “This year will surely be a fun-filled night showcasing talent, glamour, fitness, presentation and community achievement as the country’s brightest compete for the crown.”

Fifty-two women will be competing for the crown and scholarships this year. The 2017 Miss America Competition will air Sunday, Sept. 11, on ABC.

Q: I am a fan of CNBC’s “American Greed.” Do the “victims” receive any compensation for appearing on the show to tell their stories?
A: It’s hard to say for sure, because no one has to disclose it. However, it seems likely.

So-called checkbook journalism — that is, news organizations paying for interviews or information — was once frowned upon by North American journalists (though relatively common elsewhere, particularly in Britain), but critics say it has had a resurgence in the form of “licensing fees” and other kinds of indirect compensation.

For example, the New York Times reported in 2011 that ABC News landed an exclusive interview with Jaycee Dugard, the California woman held captive for 18 years, in part by paying a licensing fee for the rights to show her home movies on TV. Thus, Dugard wasn’t paid directly for her story, but money did change hands.

Similarly, David Goldman, a New Jersey father who was embroiled in a high-profile custody battle to get his son back from Brazil, appeared on NBC (CNBC’s sister network) to tell his story. The Times reports that NBC paid for a private jet to bring the father and son home, and paid for them to stay in a suite at the company’s Universal Studios amusement park upon their return. Goldman said in an interview that he was “grateful” to NBC for its support.

As you can see, the line gets a little blurry here: Being paid for your story is not the same thing as having your hotel covered while you do it.

And it would seem there’s a certain amount of journalistic holier-than-thou-ism going on there, with the print-based New York Times criticizing the broadcast networks for their conduct. But Julie Moos of the Poynter Institute, which is both a journalism school and a sort of ethics watchdog, said that the difference in media key. It suggests this creep towards checkbook journalism is occurring in TV, but not in print.

Moos lists a number of reasons why TV is more susceptible, one of which is that the advent of cable news has left TV news teams with a lot of time to fill. This is certainly true for CNBC, which has 24 hours to fill.

Q: Will “Storage Wars” be back on A&E?
A: That’s still to be determined — A&E has yet to commit to a 10th season. And the ninth just ended back in May, so we may not hear anything for a while.

It seems Dan Dotson, auctioneer on the show, might be a little worried about it, though. He’s an active Twitter user, and since the last season ended, he’s posted a couple of messages asking fans to make some social media noise if they’re already “missing” the show. Of course, that could just be normal TV show boosterism, but it could also be an attempt to prove to the network that “Storage Wars” is still popular.

Popular or not, the network might be getting tired of the show’s various scandals. For example, there were reports that Dotson, his wife, Laura, and Dave Hester got into a brawl during an episode taping. More recently, the show’s spinoff, “Storage Wars: Miami,” got the wrong kind of headlines when Hashim Pew, the son of one of its stars, was charged with murdering a family friend during a “Storage Wars: Miami” viewing party.

Love is blind: Relationships usually follow a basic path, much like that old playground song tells it: first comes love, then comes marriage, then babies and carriages (if that tickles your fancy). But what would happen if you skipped that first integral step? No, not sitting in a tree kissing, but the “love” part — the first date, getting to know a person, having that awkward “Are we official or aren’t we?” conversation. What would happen if you jumped right to the marriage part?

Sister networks A&E and FYI give viewers a little insight into the answer with the intriguing series “Married at First Sight,” which airs a new episode Tuesday, Aug. 9.

Now in its fourth season, the show takes six people, who have been vetted and selected by a group of experts, and pairs them together in what are supposed to be ideal matches. Instead of sitting down for a blind date, though, the couples are decked out in white dresses and fancy suits, and marched down the aisle to wedded bliss, seeing each other for the first time in that nerve-racking moment.

Leading the experts in season 4 is sociologist and sexologist Pepper Schwartz, a veteran of “Married at First Sight” who has been a series mainstay since the beginning. Two new specialists are joining Schwartz this season — Pastor Calvin Roberson, a marriage counselor who has been helping couples for almost 30 years, and Rachel DeAlto, a communication expert and relationship coach who has spoken frequently at TEDx events. Together, they picked the six people featured this season from a pool of 30,000 nationwide applicants, and it’s a varied bunch.

While past seasons saw couples from Georgia and New York, this year sees three men and three women who call Miami, Florida, home take the big plunge. They range in age from 24 to 35, with such varied careers as a social worker, a yacht interior specialist and a flight attendant.

It seems like the “Married at First Sight” formula is one that doesn’t set up the couples for success, but there is a small glimmer of hope. While all three couples from both seasons 2 and 3 have divorced, two couples from season 1 — Doug Hehner and Jamie Otis-Hehner, and Jason Carrion and Cortney Hendrix — are still together.

Tune in to see if the next group of newlyweds will make it or break it in their blind arranged marriages when “Married at First Sight” airs a new episode Tuesday, Aug. 9, on A&E and FYI.

Sports beaus: Relationships are hard enough when two people don’t live in the spotlight, so when you look at sports professionals — who are scrutinized day in and day out for their performances and are revered by many — it’s tough to imagine just what it’s like having a significant other living such a high-profile life.

In case you are curious about it and want to see what it’s like, E! has you covered. Its drama-filled series “WAGS” airs a new episode Sunday, Aug. 7. The show title actually refers to the group of women who count professional athletes as their better halves — “WAGS” is an acronym for wives and girlfriends of sports stars.

The WAGS in question for this series are eight women, six of whom have football spouses and two of whom are partners with hockey players. Autumn Ajirotutu and Sasha Gates are the two football wives of the group, as their husbands Seyi and Antonio, respectively, play in the NFL. Natalie Halcro, Olivia Pierson, Tia Shipman and Nicole Williams are the girlfriends of the football group.

On the hockey side, Sophia Pierson, Olivia’s younger sister and Halcro’s cousin, has been dating NHLer Jason Garrison of the Tampa Bay Lightning. Barbie Blank, a former WWE wrestler known as Kelly Kelly, makes the jump from girlfriend to wife this season as viewers are treated to an inside look at her wedding — and the preparations that went into it — to former Montreal Canadiens defenseman Sheldon Souray. (They’ve technically been officially married since February.)

Despite their beaus playing different sports, the eight women regularly get together, and as with many reality TV series, there is a lot of drama. Sophia, who is a newcomer in season 2, seems to be at the heart of a lot of this drama, and has already been called out by some of the veteran WAGS for being loud and disrespectful. In the new episode airing Aug. 7, as everyone heads to Cabo San Lucas for Barbie’s nuptials, Halcro finds out that Sophia may be the reason why Olivia’s plus one turned into a plus none.

Sports is a fast-paced world, and sometimes it seems the lives of the sports girlfriends are even faster. Check out an all-new episode of “WAGS” when it airs Sunday, Aug. 7, on E!
