'The Good Wife' ends its seven-season run

By Kyla Brewer
TV Media

Viewers love a good TV drama, but every once in a while a show comes along that rises above the typical prime-time fare — a show that catches the attention of audiences and critics for its writing, acting and more.

One such show is about to come to a close as fans bid farewell to "The Good Wife" when its series finale airs Sunday, May 8, on CBS. Julianna Margulies ("ER") stars as Alicia Florrick, a former stay-at-home mother who returned to work as a lawyer in the wake of a political and sex scandal that rocked her husband Peter's (Chris Noth, "Law & Order") political career. Fans have followed her ups and downs since the show premiered in 2009 to critical acclaim.

Shot on location in New York, the show also stars Christine Baranski ("Cybill") as Diane Lockhart, a formidable lawyer and Alicia's former boss and colleague. The main cast includes Cush Jumbo ("Torchwood") as Alicia's friend and fellow lawyer Lucca Quinn, Matt Czuchry ("Gilmore Girls") as Harvard-educated lawyer Cary Agos and Zach Grenier ("Deadwood") as senior attorney David Lee.

News of the show's impending conclusion came as a shock to many fans. CBS announced that this season would be the show's last in a dramatic promo during this year's Super Bowl in February. In just 20 seconds, they dropped the bomb that there were only nine episodes left of the beloved series.

With so many twists and turns over the past seven seasons, it's difficult to imagine how things might end for Florrick. Before there was any inkling the show was ending, Margulies talked about what she'd like for the future of her character at the 2015 PaleyFest television festival in Hollywood.

"A happy ending would be for her to find true love, but I don't know if that's going to happen," Margulies said. "I really would love to see her in a relationship that was nurturing to her and to see someone take care of her for a change."

Florrick's love life has been tumultuous from the very beginning when she struggled with her feelings for Peter and colleague Will Gardner (Josh Charles, "Dead Poets Society," 1989). This emotional battle continued until Gardner's death in season 5, after which she separated from Peter, though they remain married for the sake of their careers. This season, sparks have flown between Florrick and her private investigator, Jason Crouse (Jeffrey Dean Morgan, "Grey's Anatomy").

However, "The Good Wife" is much more than a romantic drama. With elements of legal shows and political series, it's more "Law & Order" meets "The West Wing." It has so much to offer, it's no wonder everyone seems to be having a difficult time saying goodbye.

Surely, filming those last scenes were emotional, especially for Margulies, who took to Facebook to praise co-star Jumbo as "simply the best," before calling Jeffrey Dean Morgan the "Best guy ever!!!"

Alan Cumming ("X-Men 2," 2003), who stars as Peter's political adviser, Eli Gold, also couldn't resist taking to social media to mark the end of the series. Moments after filming his last scene, he posted a pic of himself with "The Good Wife" creators Robert ("Vertical Limit," 2000) and Michelle King ("In Justice") on Instagram, proclaiming: "It's been a great ride and I'm so proud and grateful to have been a part of the show."

In a recent interview with pagesix.com, the actor revealed he almost didn't make it to the finale, having planned to bow out of the series at the end of season 6. However, when he was promised that Gold — the yin to Alicia's yang — would have more interesting things to do, he decided to stay on, presumably unaware season 7 would be the show's last.

The Kings had announced in January that season 7 would be their final bow with the series, but industry pundits and fans alike assumed "The Good Wife" would persist with a new showrunner. Unfortunately, the show will not go on without the husband-and-wife writing duo, who won a 2015 Writers Guild of America Award for their exemplary episode entitled "The Last Call."

While the Kings are the creators, Margulies is undoubtedly the heartbeat of "The Good Wife." She has been widely praised for her role, earning two Emmys, a Golden Globe, a Critics' Choice Award and more. Together, the show and its cast have earned "The Good Wife" a whopping 39 Emmy nominations, winning five. That's in addition to nominations for Golden Globes, Satellite Awards, TCA Awards and more. It has also earned the distinction of being one of AF1's top television shows.

The series' ratings are equally impressive. Each of the show's first six seasons averaged well over 10 million viewers, and season 7 is still performing well, drawing about seven to eight million viewers per episode so far.

While millions hope for closure for Florrick, many wonder what that closure might entail. There has been some speculation that she and Peter will reconcile, but, not surprisingly, CBS is keeping things under wraps for now. The only way to know for sure is to watch the series finale of "The Good Wife," airing Sunday, May 8, on CBS.

Deadpool

Grizzled mercenary Wade Wilson (Reynolds) has met the love of his life and he couldn't be happier. On the very night that he proposes marriage to Vanessa (Baccarin), though, he collapses, and is later diagnosed with terminal cancer. When a mysterious man approaches him offering an experimental cure for his disease, Wade takes him up on the offer so that Vanessa won't have to watch him deteriorate. The people behind this "treatment" turn out to be much more sinister than they seemed, and their experiments cause Wade to develop super-healing abilities. He manages to escape from the facility, but not before becoming horribly disfigured from the villainous treatment. Happy that his super healing has purged the cancer from his body but ashamed of his new appearance, Wade starts a murderous hunt for Francis (Skrein), the scientist who performed the treatment, and the only one who knows how to reverse Wade's disfigurement.

Director: Tim Miller. Stars: Ryan Reynolds, Ed Skrein, Morena Baccarin, Karan Soni. 2016. 108 min. Action.

The Boy

Greta (Cohan), an American nanny, arrives in the United Kingdom to start a job looking after the son of a wealthy couple. To her surprise and amusement, it turns out that the "boy" she's to look after is actually a porcelain doll that the couple treats as a real child after losing their son in a fire decades prior. Before leaving for their vacation, the couple gives Greta a strict list of rules to follow with their "child," which she happily ignores once she's alone. But when strange things start happening around the house and the doll starts moving from room to room, Greta begins to understand that there is more to this doll than meets the eye. Director: William Brent Bell. Stars: Lauren Cohan, Rupert Evans, James Russell. 2016. 97 min. Horror.

Where to Invade Next

Outspoken and controversial documentary filmmaker Michael Moore visits several European countries, including France, Italy and Finland, personally "invading" them to find out what lessons the United States might be able to learn from how they handle a variety of societal issues.

Director: Michael Moore. Stars: Michael Moore. 2015. 120 min. Documentary.

Former 'Food Network Star' hopefuls get a second shot at stardom

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

Who says that life doesn't give second chances? As any home cook or professional chef knows: if at first you don't succeed, try, try again! Did your soufflé fall flat? You'll have better luck next time! What do you do if your hollandaise sauce won't stop separating? Grab the whisk and give it another shot!

So what happens to former contestants in "Food Network Star," the culinary network's competition that searches for a potential TV host with the perfect mix of on-air personality and culinary know-how? Until now, they went back to their culinary careers, perhaps with a bit of fame from their brief time on TV.

But, for seven previous contestants who didn't quite make it all the way on their respective

"Food Network Star" seasons, the answer is to do what cooks everywhere do when they stumble in the kitchen: they're picking themselves up and trying again in "Food Network Star: Comeback Kitchen," premiering Sunday, May 8.

The next season of "Food Network Star" gets underway Sunday, May 22, but before that competition can get started, this group of Food Network almost-stars is getting a chance at redemption. "Comeback Kitchen" is bringing back seven fan-favorite contestants to compete against each other, with the ultimate winner earning a spot in the new "Food Network Star" season.

So who's coming back? Chris Kyler (season 10), Brianna Jenkins (season 6), Dominick Tesoriero (season 11), Martita Jara (season 8), Michele Ragussis (season 8), Matthew Grunwald (season 11) and Penny Davidi (season 7) are all ready to throw down on camera to earn a second shot at their own Food Network show.

Hosted by Tyler Florence ("The Great Food Truck Race") and Valerie Bertinelli ("Hot in Cleveland"), "Comeback Kitchen's" first challenge will be giving the hopefuls a sinking sense of déjà vu. Their task: to recreate, revitalize and rehabilitate the dish that sent them packing during their first "Food Network Star" experience.

The stakes are high. The winner of "Food Network Star" gets their own Food Network show, so getting a second chance to compete is a big deal for any chef with dreams of stardom.

"Food Network Star: Comeback Kitchen," a chance at redemption for seven Food Network near-stars, premieres Sunday, May 8.

Q&A hollywood

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: Can you explain why the Kardashians are famous? It seems like they came out of nowhere.

A: The phenomenon goes by a few names: the rather clunky "famous for being famous" (generally credited to a British journalist in the 1960s), or the state of being "famesque" (a more elegant term coined by Washington Post writer Amy Argetsinger). Regardless, it's why we know who the Kardashians are.

"The truly famesque possess the seeming gravitas that comes with a title and the suggestion of a job — actor, singer, pro athlete," Argetsinger wrote in a 2009 column about the phenomenon. "It's just that ... you've never seen them act, or heard them sing, or watched them play. Instead: You read about them. A lot." (And yes, I'm aware of the irony here.)

The Kardashians' main qualification for stardom is that they're incredibly rich. They're the children (and ex-wife) of the hugely successful lawyer Robert Kardashian, who you may remember from O.J. Simpson's defense team. They grew up in Beverly Hills, where Kim, arguably the most famous one, became friends with Paris Hilton, another famesque celebrity.

Of course, it's not just who you know. In February 2007, a tape was leaked that showed Kim having sex. Even this might not have been particularly noteworthy, were it not for the fact that a similar thing happened to Hilton a couple of years earlier. Regardless, it made headlines.

The whole family joined Kim in the spotlight eight months later when their reality show, "Keeping Up With the Kardashians," debuted on E!

Q: Has the guy who played Toofer done anything since "30 Rock"?

A: Keith Powell's done a little, but nothing with the kind of exposure "30 Rock" gave him.

He's done a few guest spots and short arcs, such as a six-episode run in the now-canceled sitcom "About a Boy," and a couple of episodes of HBO's "The Newsroom," both in 2014 ("30 Rock" left the air in 2013).

But his main pursuit at the moment is a web series of his own creation, "Keith Broke His Leg." He stars as a fictionalized version of himself, which allows for a number of fellow actors to show up and play themselves as well — people such as former "Parks and Recreation" star Aubrey Plaza and former "Army Wives" star Alyssa Diaz.

The series recently won the Best Comedy prize at the Indie Series Awards (a sort of Emmy Awards for web-based shows). All 10 episodes produced so far are available on the show's site, GetBroken.com.

He has a few other irons in the Hollywood fire, though. He recently wrapped an indie film called "The Way We Weren't" and has written a film script called "Swing Things" that's currently being shopped around (Ken Whittingham, who directed Powell on "About a Boy," was attached to it at one point).
