Using solar lighting saves $5,000-$7,000 over traditional electric wiring that requires digging up the street to reach a power source.

Bus stop shelters don't go to sleep when the sun goes down. They emit a welcoming glow and a sense of safety on a darkened street.

Highly visible shelters with illuminated advertising panels deliver a message with impact and become an additional source of revenue for transit companies.

Handi-Hut, Clifton NJ, a 40 year old passenger shelter manufacturer began "planting" its green solar powered shelters about 10 years ago and they are now shining on streets throughout the USA.

Handi-Hut, Inc. is veteran-owned and a GSA Premier Provider, certified by the U.S. General Services Administration (GSA) as a top-tier vendor of multi-purpose modular shelters.
