HANDLING HOUSEHOLD HAZARDOUS WASTE IN BROOKLYN, QUEENS AND STATEN ISLAND

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is working with the City of New York to collect common household hazardous waste (HHW) from flood-damaged homes in the New York City area. The primary focus of this effort is now in Brooklyn, Queens and Staten Island. Residents of flood-impacted areas in these boroughs are encouraged to put waste products on their curbs for pickup, including: solvents, paints, cleaners, oil, propane tanks, batteries, petroleum products, weed/bug killers, car batteries, bleach and ammonia. Through Sunday, December 2, 2012, the EPA and its contractors will drive the streets of impacted areas to pick up the household hazardous waste (HHW) on the curb at each residence.

Please segregate HHW from other garbage and stack items in cardboard boxes or clear plastic tote bins for easy identification and separation.

For more information and to view maps where curbside pickup will occur, visit: <http://epa.gov/sandy/hazardouswastepickup.html>

The New York City Department of Sanitation will be picking up white goods, such as refrigerators and other appliances.

For more information, call the EPA's regional public liaison, George Zachos, at: 1-888-283-7626.
