College leaders converge for local students for enrollment and undergraduate admissions at University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Not pictured is Dr. Dorothy Cowser Yancy, president of Fayetteville State University; Dr. Ervin Griffin Sr. and Tyus Few, vice chairman of Halifax County Schools Board of Education; Dr. James A. Anderson, president of North Carolina Wesleyan College; Nigel Alston, an officer at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro; and Styx Even, vice chairman of Halifax County Schools Board of Education.

Sgt. M.P. Gallo said the patrol is reaching out to the community for assistance as part of an effort to keep on top of these unsolved crimes.

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything,” Gallo said. “We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Gallo added there has been an increase in fatal hit and run collisions, but it is important to make the public aware of these that have not been brought to a conclusion through investigation.

The most recent occurred in Lincoln Heights on Branch Avenue around 12 a.m. on March 26.

Pedestrian Sheila Brimson was walking in the eastbound lane when a vehicle traveling west hit her and left the scene.

While some in the community believe Brimson may have been targeted, details and investigations of these types of vehicle collisions are standard.

There’s a procedure we go through with facts.

Hit & run deaths remain a concern

College leaders converge for local students

“Go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Sgt. M.P. Gallo said the patrol is reaching out to the community for assistance as part of an effort to keep on top of these unsolved crimes.

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Gallo added there has been an increase in fatal hit and run collisions, but it is important to make the public aware of these that have not been brought to a conclusion through investigation.

The most recent occurred in Lincoln Heights on Branch Avenue around 12 a.m. on March 26.

Pedestrian Sheila Brimson was walking in the eastbound lane when a vehicle traveling west hit her and left the scene.

While some in the community believe Brimson may have been targeted, details and investigations of these types of vehicle collisions are standard.

There’s a procedure we go through with facts.

Hit & run deaths remain a concern

College leaders converge for local students

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Sgt. M.P. Gallo said the patrol is reaching out to the community for assistance as part of an effort to keep on top of these unsolved crimes.

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Gallo added there has been an increase in fatal hit and run collisions, but it is important to make the public aware of these that have not been brought to a conclusion through investigation.

The most recent occurred in Lincoln Heights on Branch Avenue around 12 a.m. on March 26.

Pedestrian Sheila Brimson was walking in the eastbound lane when a vehicle traveling west hit her and left the scene.

While some in the community believe Brimson may have been targeted, details and investigations of these types of vehicle collisions are standard.

There’s a procedure we go through with facts.

Picture 1: Hit & run deaths remain a concern

College leaders converge for local students

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Sgt. M.P. Gallo said the patrol is reaching out to the community for assistance as part of an effort to keep on top of these unsolved crimes.

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Gallo added there has been an increase in fatal hit and run collisions, but it is important to make the public aware of these that have not been brought to a conclusion through investigation.

The most recent occurred in Lincoln Heights on Branch Avenue around 12 a.m. on March 26.

Pedestrian Sheila Brimson was walking in the eastbound lane when a vehicle traveling west hit her and left the scene.

While some in the community believe Brimson may have been targeted, details and investigations of these types of vehicle collisions are standard.

There’s a procedure we go through with facts.

Hit & run deaths remain a concern

College leaders converge for local students

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Sgt. M.P. Gallo said the patrol is reaching out to the community for assistance as part of an effort to keep on top of these unsolved crimes.

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Gallo added there has been an increase in fatal hit and run collisions, but it is important to make the public aware of these that have not been brought to a conclusion through investigation.

The most recent occurred in Lincoln Heights on Branch Avenue around 12 a.m. on March 26.

Pedestrian Sheila Brimson was walking in the eastbound lane when a vehicle traveling west hit her and left the scene.

While some in the community believe Brimson may have been targeted, details and investigations of these types of vehicle collisions are standard.

There’s a procedure we go through with facts.

Hit & run deaths remain a concern

College leaders converge for local students

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Sgt. M.P. Gallo said the patrol is reaching out to the community for assistance as part of an effort to keep on top of these unsolved crimes.

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Gallo added there has been an increase in fatal hit and run collisions, but it is important to make the public aware of these that have not been brought to a conclusion through investigation.

The most recent occurred in Lincoln Heights on Branch Avenue around 12 a.m. on March 26.

Pedestrian Sheila Brimson was walking in the eastbound lane when a vehicle traveling west hit her and left the scene.

While some in the community believe Brimson may have been targeted, details and investigations of these types of vehicle collisions are standard.

There’s a procedure we go through with facts.

Hit & run deaths remain a concern

College leaders converge for local students

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Sgt. M.P. Gallo said the patrol is reaching out to the community for assistance as part of an effort to keep on top of these unsolved crimes.

“We go through these (frequently). We’re trying to follow up to see if anybody knows anything.”

Gallo added there has been an increase in fatal hit and run collisions, but it is important to make the public aware of these that have not been brought to a conclusion through investigation.

The most recent occurred in Lincoln Heights on Branch Avenue around 12 a.m. on March 26.

Pedestrian Sheila Brimson was walking in the eastbound lane when a vehicle traveling west hit her and left the scene.

While some in the community believe Brimson may have been targeted, details and investigations of these types of vehicle collisions are standard.

There’s a procedure we go through with facts.