Maisie Williams stars in "Game of Thrones"

'Game' changer

After a grueling wait, fans can rejoice — winter is here and, like Jon Snow (Kit Harington, "Pompeii," 2014), we know nothing. For the first time, audiences are going in blind as "Game of Thrones" has outpaced George R.R. Martin's epic fantasy novels, but don't worry: showrunners David Benioff and D.B. Weiss promise an experience that's unique from the book. Catch the season 6 premiere of "Game of Thrones," airing Sunday, April 24, on HBO.

You know nothing

'Game of Thrones' ventures into uncharted territory

By Cassie Dresch
TV Media

Winter is here, folks. After a grueling, almost year-long wait, "Game of Thrones" is back, and boy oh boy is there a lot to chew on. Season 6 of the critically acclaimed series premieres Sunday, April 24, on HBO.

From Jon Snow's (Kit Harington, "Pompeii," 2014) death and the unknown fate of Sansa (Sophie Turner, "Barely Lethal," 2015) and Theon (Alfie Allen, "John Wick," 2014) to Tyrion's (Peter Dinklage, "Threshold") adventures and Arya's (Maisie Williams, "Doctor Who") eye-opening predicament, fans are itching for answers — especially since there's no more source material from which to glean even an inkling of what's to come.

So, just like Snow, we know nothing except what has slowly leaked out, and even still, it's not much. We know that Bran (Isaac Hempstead Wright, "The Awakening," 2011) and Hodor (Kristian Nairn, "Four Warriors," 2015) are back — and with the Three-Eyed Raven (Max von Sydow, "Shutter Island," 2010) — after remaining conspicuously absent throughout season 5. We know Golden Globe winner Ian McShane ("Deadwood") joins the cast for a minor, yet important, role. We know that we meet members of Samwell Tarly's (John Bradley, "Borgia") family. But other than casting news, everything's shrouded in mystery.

Of course, mystery is good and often welcomed, unless you're like the legions of fans who have read the books on which the show is based and are worried about spoilers. George R.R. Martin's epic fantasy series A Song of Ice and Fire has captivated audiences since the first novel's release in 1996, but Martin's been a bit slow with releasing his novels, and only five of the seven planned works have been published so far.

Still, series creators and showrunners David Benioff and D.B. Weiss assured fans in an interview with Entertainment Weekly last month that there's nothing to worry about.

"People are talking about whether the books are going to be spoiled — and it's really not true," Benioff said. "So much of what we're doing diverges from the books at this point. And while there are certain key elements that will be the same, we're not going to talk so much about that. ... People are going to be very surprised when they read the books after the show. They're quite divergent in so many respects for the remainder of the show."

Weiss added that they knew it was inevitable that they'd pass the books, so they took a silver-lining approach, hoping the fans would, too.

"At a certain point, we realized we were going to outpace the books," he said, "and we kind of chose to see it as a great thing on both sides — there's this amazing world George has created, and now there are two different versions, and there's no reason we can see why you can't be thrilled and surprised and dismayed by both of these different versions of this world."

Martin, for his part, told IGN in February that, in a perfect world, he would have had the sixth book, "The Winds of Winter," published by the start of "Game of Thrones" sixth season, but other factors stilled that desire.

"Ideally, I would have liked to have finished the books and have the story complete, but the show moves at a faster pace than I do," Martin said. "That's partly because I'm a slow writer and I've always been a slow writer, and also I've had a lot of distractions in the last few years. I wrote several episodes [of 'Game of Thrones'] in the early seasons. I'm a co-executive producer. That took up a considerable amount of time. But it is what it is."

He's right — it is what it is, and now the books' fans and the show's fans are in the same place. No one, save the cast and crew, knows where the story's heading, and after a hugely successful fifth season that broke the record for most Emmy wins by a series in a single year (12 wins of 24 nominations), it's tough not to feel excited for season 6. Benioff even fed the frenzy with a bold statement about the new season.

"Usually there's an episode or two we're kind of nervous about that didn't turn out as well as we hoped," he told Entertainment Weekly. "This season there is not a weak episode. ... We're always reluctant to say it's 'the best season yet' because so much of that is in the eyes of the beholder. And Dan [Weiss] and I are so close to it that it's impossible to be unbiased. But that's my sense — watching [the episodes] all together now, this is the best one we've done."

Let that sink in: "The best one we've done." If that doesn't get you hyped for the new season of "Game of Thrones," then nothing will. So get set to return to Westeros, Essos and everywhere in between as season 6 of the hit drama "Game of Thrones" premieres Sunday, April 24, on HBO.

Jane Got a Gun

Years after her run-ins with the notorious Bishop Boys gang, Jane Hammond has settled down to a quiet life with her husband, Bill. Their peace is shattered, though, when Bill crosses paths with the gang's relentless new leader. With her husband recovering from multiple bullet wounds and the Bishop Boys thirsting for vengeance, Jane's past and present collide when she turns to her ex-fiancé for help saving her family.

Director: Gavin O'Connor. Stars: Natalie Portman. 2016. 98 min. Action.

Krampus

The classic Christmas tale is turned on its head when the whole Engel family comes together to celebrate the holidays. Young Max is excited to celebrate the season with all of their family's traditions, but tensions bubble over between loved ones, and the family quickly loses its Christmas spirit. To make matters worse, a crippling snowstorm blows through town and knocks out the family's power. When strange and terrifying things begin to happen around the house, the family's Austrian grandmother, Omi, tells them about Krampus, Santa Claus's sinister counterpart, according to Christmas tradition in parts of Europe. With the Engels

Fox
The Last Man on Earth
 When Tandy (Will Forte) and Carol (Kristen Schaal) ask him for a major favor, Todd (Mel Rodriguez) has a lot to think about in a new episode of "The Last Man on Earth," airing Sunday, April 24, on Fox. Elsewhere, Gail's (Mary Steenburgen) wine consumption has spiraled out of control.

Will Forte stars in "The Last Man on Earth"

Back to the valley

HBO's 'Silicon Valley' is a geeky laugh fest

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

Back to the valley: The Pied Piper startup guys are back with another season of HBO's "Silicon Valley." The Golden Globe-nominated comedy's return to television is cause for excitement among tech geeks everywhere, and for anyone else with a funny bone, too.

Sunday, April 24, is the launch date for the show's anticipated third season, which is set to pick up right where season 2 left off.

Created by "King of the Hill" and "Beavis and Butt-Head" mastermind Mike Judge, with John Altschuler and Dave Krinsky, "Silicon Valley" is a laugh-out-loud comedy that follows a group of awkward young men who founded a tech startup company, complete with all of the headaches that go along with it.

Thomas Middleditch ("The Wolf of Wall Street," 2013), T.J. Miller ("Cloverfield," 2008), Josh Brener ("The Internship," 2013), Martin Starr ("Freaks and Geeks"), Kumail Nanjiani ("Franklin & Bash") and Zach Woods ("Spy," 2015) all share screen time as the founders of Pied Piper, a data management company that's developed a revolutionary new way of compressing data. Rounding out the cast are Amanda Crew ("The Age of Adaline," 2015), Matt Ross ("The Aviator," 2004) and Suzanne Cryer ("The Fosters") as some of the Silicon Valley folks who are involved with — or competing with — the Pied Piper gang.

HBO's programs are often awards show favorites, and "Silicon Valley" is no exception. Its two seasons have netted it two Golden Globe nominations, and it's won two Critics' Choice TV Awards, including the prize for best comedy series in 2015.

All of the wacky tech startup hijinks return to HBO Sunday, April 24.

Top wife: Bravo isn't just for chefs and housewives any longer. The cable network has long been the home for reality favorites such as "Top Chef" and the various Real Housewives programs, but lately it's been making a push into original scripted programming.

"My So Called Wife" is the third such script ordered to series by Bravo, and while it's still early in development, its roster is already filling up with actors.

Inbar Lavi ("Gang Related") will star as Maddie, a con artist who uses her unequalled charm and good looks to seduce both men and women. Once she has a ring on her finger and a signature on the marriage certificate, she makes off with all of their money — and with enough dirty information to make sure that her victims don't complain to the police.

It's a classic, cruel con, but things start to fall apart when two of her previous victims track her down just as she's moving in on her next mark.

Discussing Bravo's push into scripted fare, NBCUniversal Cable Entertainment's president of lifestyle networks Frances Berwick says: "Filled with intrigue and drama along with Bravo's trademark wink and humor, this series is the perfect addition to the network's slate as we continue our drive in the scripted arena."

You can expect to see "My So Called Wife" on Bravo some time during the 2016-17 television season.

Red mist: Spike is back! Back into scripted series, that is. Since the success of last year's event series "Tut" — a scripted drama about the famous Egyptian pharaoh — the channel has been busily snatching up scripts for some upcoming projects.

"Red Mars" has been ordered straight to series, and with a big name attached as its executive producer and some acclaimed subject matter to work off of, it's not surprising that it's skipped the traditional pilot stage entirely.

Emmy-winning director Greg Yaitanes will serve as both the show's director and executive producer. His credits include "Lost," "Grey's Anatomy," "Heroes" and

"House," and now his extensive talents will be put to use adapting the award-winning Mars trilogy for the screen.

The three novels in the science fiction series by Kim Stanley Robinson — "Red Mars," "Green Mars" and "Blue Mars" — span centuries of time, following the human colonization and terraforming of Mars.

"Red Mars" isn't the only literary adaptation in the works at Spike — a pilot episode of Stephen King's "The Mist" has also been ordered. If the pilot is picked up for a full series, it will be the second time that the horror novel has been adapted for the screen, the first being the 2007 film that starred Thomas Jane ("Deep Blue Sea," 1999) and Laurie Holden ("The Walking Dead").

"The Mist" is a monster story of sorts, set in a small New England town that is enveloped in fog after a powerful storm. It's not the fog that's dangerous, though — it's the creatures that live inside of it.

With "Red Mars" already ordered to series and "The Mist" in the pilot stage, it's looking like Spike was just testing the waters with last year's "Tut." Look for both new series in the near future.

Zach Woods, T.J. Miller, Thomas Middleditch, Kumail Nanjiani and Martin Starr star in "Silicon Valley"

Q&A Hollywood

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: I just finished watching "Rocky Balboa," the sixth Rocky movie, and was wondering about the guy who played Mason Dixon. Who is he?

A: The 2006 hit "Rocky Balboa" continued the franchise's tradition of hiring actual boxers to fill key roles. Mason "The Line" Dixon, the younger champ who wants to take on the legendary Rocky Balboa, was played by real-life pro boxer Antonio Tarver.

Tarver was the International Boxing Organization light heavyweight champion at the time "Rocky Balboa" was made. He later lost that belt but is still fighting — his pro record is 31 wins, six losses and two no contests. He previously fought for the American Olympic team at the 1996 games in Atlanta, where he won bronze after losing in the semifinals.

The films made before and after "Rocky Balboa" made similar casting choices. The 2015 hit "Creed" featured British pro Tony Bellew as the main villain/opponent, "Pretty" Ricky Conlan, while 1990's "Rocky V" had Rocky squaring off against Tommy Morrison, who would go on to become the real-life heavyweight champion in 1993.

Q: I'm rewatching "Perry Mason" on MeTV and loving it. What else has the actor who played Paul Drake done?

A: Sadly, "Perry Mason" was almost the last role William Hopper ever took (and he probably wished it was the last).

Despite being just 42 when he took the role of Paul Drake, faithful private detective to the hot-shot defense lawyer Perry Mason, most of his career lay behind him by that point. Hopper died of a heart attack in 1970, at the age of 55.

He went into a (second) retirement period after "Perry" left the air, returning four years later to appear in the notoriously bad 1970 film "Myra Breckinridge" (Time magazine's review called it "an insult to intelligence, an affront to sensibility and an abomination to the eye").

An early retirement seemed reasonable in Hopper's case, since he took his first role before he was a year old. The son of two acting parents, Hopper's first role was playing "Infant in Carriage" in the 1916 comedy "Sunshine Dad," which starred his father, DeWolf Hopper.

Amazingly, most of his whopping 117 film roles were uncredited — they were mostly bit parts and non-speaking roles. Some of them came in some pretty notable films, such as 1941's "The Maltese Falcon" and 1942's "Yankee Doodle Dandy." And while 117 seems like a lot of movies, because the roles were mostly small, he was able to squeeze a lot of them into a short time — for example, he appeared in 24 films in 1941 alone.

Q: Tom Hanks is the quintessential good guy. Has he ever played a villain?

A: The 2002 drama "Road to Perdition" is the closest Tom Hanks has come to playing a villain, but even that's a bit of a gray area.

Yes, his character, Michael Sullivan, is a hitman with the Irish mob, and sure, he is known as the Angel of Death for his kill count and efficiency. But he's also a devoted family man, and the movie is really about his redemption. The film is about him going on the run from his old organization in order to protect his son.

That nuance and depth of motivation is what sets that particular villain apart from most Hollywood bad guys, Hanks said in an interview on CBS's "The Early Show." "He has good motivations for doing very bad things."

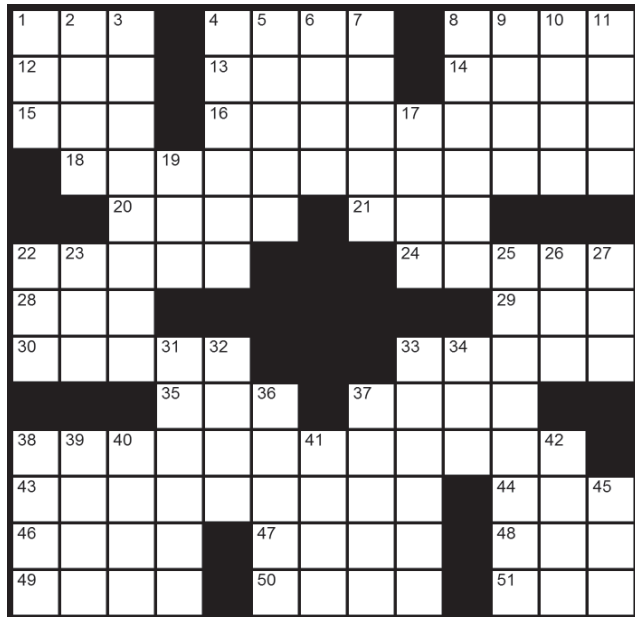

In a 2013 interview with Total Film magazine, he stated his position unequivocally. "Look, playing bad, I am not interested, ever. ... I don't want to see bad guys who are just bad, you know? Why are they bad?"

That said, he would make an exception for James Bond. He told Britain's Daily Mirror newspaper in 2015 that he would love to play an over-the-top Bond villain.

now all but certain that Krampus is terrorizing them, it becomes clear that it's their lack of Christmas spirit.

Director: Michael Dougherty.
Stars: Emjay Anthony. 2015. 98 min. Horror/Comedy.

Son of Saul

Saul Ausländer is a Jewish prisoner in Auschwitz, the Nazi concentration camp, where he is part of a team that burns dead prisoners. While handling the bodies of gas chamber victims, he comes across one that he believes is his son. Unable to burn the body, he convinces the prison's doctor to let him bury it instead. For a proper burial, though, he needs to find a rabbi, a task much easier said than done under the watchful eyes of the Nazi guards.

Director: László Nemes. Stars: Géza Röhrig. 2015. 107 min. Drama.
