Brownback's tax plan takes shape — Letters to the Journal

Brownback's tax plan takes shape

By M. Elizabeth Skaggs

The Kansas Department of Revenue has released the Kansas tax plan that Governor Sam Brownback hopes to present to the 2013 Kansas Legislature. The plan would result in 30 percent of all taxes paid by Kansas residents being redirected into the state's rainy day fund and create $1 billion in tax cuts over two years. In exchange, businesses would be permitted to deduct their employee health insurance costs from their state income taxes, and individual income tax rates would be reduced from 7 percent to 5.7 percent.

Brownback has said that the state's current tax code is overly complex and inefficient. To simplify the tax code, he has reduced the number of brackets from seven to three, and has eliminated the state's personal exemption for married couples filing jointly.

Brownback plans to present his tax proposal to the Kansas Legislature during the first week of January. The plan is expected to be debated extensively during the legislative session, which is scheduled to begin on January 28th.

Letter to readers

City limits包括作者's home. The opinions shared here are those of the author. The Kansas Department of Revenue has released the Kansas tax plan that Governor Sam Brownback hopes to present to the 2013 Kansas Legislature. The plan would result in 30 percent of all taxes paid by Kansas residents being redirected into the state's rainy day fund and create $1 billion in tax cuts over two years. In exchange, businesses would be permitted to deduct their employee health insurance costs from their state income taxes, and individual income tax rates would be reduced from 7 percent to 5.7 percent.

Brownback has said that the state's current tax code is overly complex and inefficient. To simplify the tax code, he has reduced the number of brackets from seven to three, and has eliminated the state's personal exemption for married couples filing jointly.

Brownback plans to present his tax proposal to the Kansas Legislature during the first week of January. The plan is expected to be debated extensively during the legislative session, which is scheduled to begin on January 28th.

Letter to readers

City limits包括作者's home. The opinions shared here are those of the author. The Kansas Department of Revenue has released the Kansas tax plan that Governor Sam Brownback hopes to present to the 2013 Kansas Legislature. The plan would result in 30 percent of all taxes paid by Kansas residents being redirected into the state's rainy day fund and create $1 billion in tax cuts over two years. In exchange, businesses would be permitted to deduct their employee health insurance costs from their state income taxes, and individual income tax rates would be reduced from 7 percent to 5.7 percent.

Brownback has said that the state's current tax code is overly complex and inefficient. To simplify the tax code, he has reduced the number of brackets from seven to three, and has eliminated the state's personal exemption for married couples filing jointly.

Brownback plans to present his tax proposal to the Kansas Legislature during the first week of January. The plan is expected to be debated extensively during the legislative session, which is scheduled to begin on January 28th.

Letter to readers

City limits包括作者's home. The opinions shared here are those of the author. The Kansas Department of Revenue has released the Kansas tax plan that Governor Sam Brownback hopes to present to the 2013 Kansas Legislature. The plan would result in 30 percent of all taxes paid by Kansas residents being redirected into the state's rainy day fund and create $1 billion in tax cuts over two years. In exchange, businesses would be permitted to deduct their employee health insurance costs from their state income taxes, and individual income tax rates would be reduced from 7 percent to 5.7 percent.

Brownback has said that the state's current tax code is overly complex and inefficient. To simplify the tax code, he has reduced the number of brackets from seven to three, and has eliminated the state's personal exemption for married couples filing jointly.

Brownback plans to present his tax proposal to the Kansas Legislature during the first week of January. The plan is expected to be debated extensively during the legislative session, which is scheduled to begin on January 28th.