Fourth of July plans finalized

By Andrew Bundy

BROCKWAY - The Brockway Borough Council received an update about the 4th of July festivities at Thursday's meet-

The 4th of July Committee explained that this year's theme is Native Americans, and it is planning on a Lego building contest, a 10K and a bike race, fishing, a basketball tournament, a car show, and then wrapping up with a parade and fireworks.

To help ease traffic on that day, the borough is going to make 7th Avenue one-way from Park Street to Alexander Street like last year. There will also be no parking on that street to make sure that people can easilv leave the fireworks and make it back to Main Street.

The 4th of July was not the only old-fashioned topic at the meeting. The zoning ordinances had not been updated in almost 50 years, making it difficult for the zoning board to function. The council voted to have EADS work on new maps and ordinances to bring the borough in-line with many changes in land use and terminology in the last half-century.

In money matters, the council accepted a bid for its Ford F-350 dump truck, selling the truck for $12,857. The council is also reviewing a new ordinance to move the police retirement fund to Municipal Retirement Trust. Since previous changes had been done by ordinance, the council has to advertise a new ordinance and pass it. The new one will have language allowing the council to change that investment with a resolution in the future.

The fire department responded to five calls in May. Two were fires, one was a motor vehicle accident, one was a fuel spill, and the last was a potential fire that did not happen. The structure that the fire department purchased on 7th Ave. and Main Street was demolished.

The recreation board had a busy May after swearing in a new member to get to a full board. They had a cleaning day at the municipal pool with many volunteers. They received applications for concession workers and lifeguards. They also brought in two groundskeepers and two assistant groundskeepers to keep the park clean. The volleyball courts need to be updated, so there will be a fundraiser.

The historical society changed the way it structures its board. Now, the borough has two members, one elected and one appointed. The other five

Write-ins counted for November

By Julie Benamati

CLEARFIELD - Two weeks after the May 19 primary election, the Clearfield County Elections Office has finally been able to count all of the write-in votes that were cast across the region.

According to Dawn Graham, director of elections, this year's election was more painstaking because numerous local posts were up for vote - borough council, township supervisors, school board directors, auditors and more.

Clearfield County

Many of those open seats had only one candidate in each political party running for the nomination and some had no candidates at all. And in that situation, there are numerous write-in votes - and every one counts.

The elections office released the list of write-in winners, but noted that the results will remain unofficial until the election is certified Monday. Winners are being notified by mail to determine if they will accept the nomination by sending in necessary paperwork required to be named to the November ballot.

That was the case in Bloom Township, where angry residents launched a last-minute write-in campaign against incumbent Supervisor Chairman William Kendall. A hot-button issue over fire protection with Grampian-Penn-Bloom Volunteer Fire Co. brought numerous residents to township meetings earlier this year after Kendall and Supervisor Tom Leonard in March voted to send a 60-day notice to GPB to end the fire protection contract. Supervisor Mike Hollabaugh voted no.

When Kendall refused to entertain rescinding the 60-day notice at the township's May meeting, resident Nancy Murray led a write-in campaign to bring former Bloom Township Supervisor Mickey Ramsey back into the six-year term he vacated in 2007.

Ramsey earned 37 votes to defeat Kendall's 33 for the Republican nomination. He also earned 20 Democratic votes.

"I'm going to accept that position," Ramsey said in a telephone See Counted, Page A7
