Police seek suspect in death of Coos Bay man

By Tim Novotny The World

COOS BAY — An Empire-area man died Saturday after police found him lying wounded in his driveway.

Coos County District Attorney Paul Frasier said neighbors called police just after 9 p.m. to report an altercation.

Arriving at 820 Augustine Ave. within five minutes, police found Randall Leroy Harless, 55, still alive to Bay Area Hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

Investigators are not yet announcing a cause of death, but Frasier says it's "clear he died from homicidal violence." An autopsy is set for Tuesday.

As for a suspect, authorities said they have very little to go on. They are looking for a man between 5foot-10 and 6 feet tall, weighing between 180 and 200 pounds. The man was last seen heading south but seriously injured. He was taken on Augustine toward the Empire Lakes area. He may have had a backpack with him.

Dogs find nothing

Tracking dogs were brought in to search for the man Saturday night, but they found nothing.

On Sunday morning, a crime lab crew from Springfield was processing the scene on Augustine Avenue, while aerial shots of the

Abused by priest, woman gets apology

By Sarah Haase

REEDSPORT — For the Catholic Church, it was the "21st Sunday in ordinary time;" for Carolee Horning, Sunday was the day she received an extraordinary apology.

Before the service began at St. John the Apostle church, Monsignor Dennis O'Donovan relayed an apology on behalf of Archbishop John Vlazny and the Archdiocese of Portland for the sexual abuse Horning endured nearly two decades ago by a priest.

The apology on Sunday was the first time the archdiocese has named a victim publicly.

"I express my deep regret and sorrow to Ms. Horning, and now apologize also to her family and anyone in this faith community who was injured by Father (Edward) Altstock," O'Donovan read from a prepared statement. "We cannot undo the past. On my behalf, however, those who assist me in these matters responded to Ms. Horning's report in ways that would facilitate her healing."

In 1984, Altstock, then 54 arrived at St. John the Apostle Parish. He befriended Horning, then 13, and her family, some of whom are still members of the congregation.

When Horning was 15, a trusted friendship turned sexual, and her life began to shatter. Growing up was difficult for her, she said. She managed to graduate from Reedsport High School and go on to graduate with a bachelor's degree from Oregon State University. But her life was just not "normal."

Horning reached her breaking point, and in September 2011 filed a lawsuit against the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Portland.

"I realized I wasn't living my life," she said. "All my friends were married and had kids, and

Muddy event cleans up for cancer campers

■ Money will go to sponsor children at Camp Millennium

By Jessie Higgins The World

SMITH RIVER — Barnyard Toyz Racing was born four years ago out of a Douglas County family's love for mud racing and love for a terminally ill friend.

Sunday afternoon, Brenda Priest slowly steered her car away from the mud bog event where a line of trucks revved their engines waiting for a chance to plunge through the muck. She wiped away tears spilling fast from her eyes.

When she and her husband started this event, they hoped to raise money for a family friend whose young son was battling cancer. But the boy died about two

And considering the event's growing popularity, the goal is not far fetched.

Last week, thousands of mud racing enthusiasts descended on John and Brenda Priest's Smith River property to camp and race through dirt, rock and mud. Although the Priests advertise some locally, most of the people at the event are here through word of mouth.

"We've heard from people that they like the atmosphere here," John Priest said. He glanced around his property. The nearby line of trucks, crowd of spectators and ceaseless noise from an announcer are the first things to grab attention.

preparation for the event, though the family brings in outside help for security and event management.

This year, Priest added a rock obstacle course, basically a steep hill covered with large boulders up which trucks must drive. The winning truck made it to the top in three minutes, Brenda Priest said, now smiling.

She continued driving through the camping areas, passed the obstacle course and the drag race strip now turned into a mud bog.

Priest hopes next year to add barrel racing. She watched it at another truck racing event, and wants to try it out her-

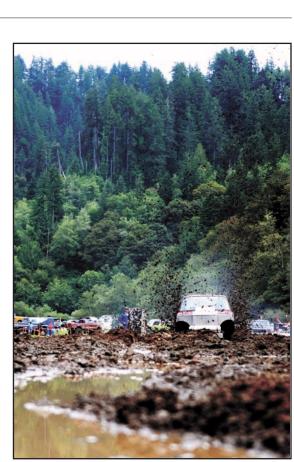

"It was really redneck, but fun to watch," she said.

"We just haven't found the time to add it. It all takes a lot of time, a lot more than we get out of it."

But, the Priests plan to continue holding the event, so long as everyone is safe, she said.

"It is just fun to see all the people here having a good time."

Feds seek input on LNG tonight

By Jessie Higgins The World

COOS BAY - Federal officials want the community's input tonight on the environmental impact of building a liquefied natural gas export facility on the North Spit and a pipeline to serve it. "The most fact-based comments are the most helpful," said Tamara Young-

Allen, a spokeswoman for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. "If you know there's an endangered species that could be impacted by this, let us know. If a school is nearby. If you're a property owner and concerned about it being near you." FERC will hold its first of four scoping sessions to collect comments on Jordan Cove Energy Partner's proposed LNG export facility and the Pacific Connector Pipeline at 6:30 p.m. in the Hales Performing Arts Center at Southwestern Oregon Community College.

Deadline nears Thefts & Mischief

The filing period for Coos Bay mayor and city council positions closes at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Open are the two-year mayor's post and three fouryear council seats. Only incumbent Mayor Crystal Shoji and Councilor Gene Melton have filed for reelection. Only one candidate, Howard Forte, has filed for a council seat.

Interested citizens may obtain more information and file with Finance the Coos Bay City Hall, 500 Central Ave., or call 541-269-8915.

The session is part of a federally mandated process that LNG companies must go through before a permit application can be filed.

Process ends Sept. 4

The purpose of scoping is for Jordan Cove first to determine whether to file an application, and for FERC to determine what environmental issues the company should address in that application.

Scoping will close Sept. 4. Jordan Cove will then gather environmental data and make its case in a formal application. FERC officials will use the data collected in those applications to write an Environmental Impact Statement on the proposed facilities. FERC officials will use that statement to decide whether to grant a permit to build or not.

This is the South Coast's second time witnessing an LNG terminal application process. Seven years ago, Jordan Cove successfully over.

Although all the environmental issues - such as water quality, impact on native species and upland forests - must be re-evaluated, other areas of the application that can be reviewed again, said Bob Braddock, Jordan Cove's project leader.

This has some people in the community worried, said Ron Sadler, a retired Bureau of Land Management chief of forestry planning for Oregon and Washington.

Sadler said the Jordan Cove's former Environmental Impact Statement for its proposed import facility was needlessly difficult to understand and incomplete.

Sadler said the community must call for Jordan Cove to address the need for an export facility and the feasible alternatives to fill that need. The company must also detail Coos Bay's baseline environment, he said.

'Stops Along the Way' A short duck season, but a good one

BY RON SADLER

In this section from his memoir, "Stops Along the Way," Ron Sadler describes his first duck hunt after recovering from a near-fatal heart attack.

I don't remember if I dropped some hints, or if my hunting pard Tim prodded me, but we decided I couldn't let an entire season go by without a single duck hunt, infarction or no.

The pre-hunt rituals took on special meaning. Getting all my gear together the night before was a very pleasurable experience that I lingered over rather than engaging in the semi-frantic scurrying that usually took place.

The pre-dawn meeting at the diner for breakfast was a familiar ritual, but I must admit to forgoing bacon and eggs for a bowl of oatmeal and an English muffin.

Wading into challenge

We arrived at our hunting spot in the Coquille Valley on schedule about an hour before shooting time. We would be hunting in a large area of pastureland that was covered by water for four or five months each winter.

As we parked the truck and put on our chest waders, I thought about my first challenge. I knew I would have to walk about a mile to get to our blind, mostly through water ranging from ankle deep to hip high. I was uncertain as to whether I was facing a psychological or a physical challenge, but I suspected it was a little of both.

We started off into the darkness. Tim carried an overloaded pack of decoys. I had my old Trapper Nelson packboard on, but it was mostly for old times' sake as it contained only my Thermos, shells, gloves, and raingear. We reached the edge of the water and started in.

The waders and the water made my legs feel heavy and slow. As part of my recovery, I had been doing my brisk twomile road walk faithfully, but this was a different situation entirely. I slogged on, but at a much slower pace than I remembered, with all internal monitoring systems on full alert for any unusual or unexplained sensations.

Cold duck

We finally reached the blind. I was a little tired, as the walk had obviously used some muscles that hadn't been exercised for a while. I was breathing a little heavily, but with no cause for alarm. As we set out the decoys, I noticed Tim keeping an eye on me while doing his best not to make it appear obvious. As shooting time arrived, it was clear that this was not going to be a red-letter duck day. A thick ground fog had moved in and settled over us like a heavy wet cloak. We had set our outermost decovs at about 50 yards from the blind, and they had disappeared into the mist.

On top of this, I seemed to be unusually sensitive to the cold, which initially triggered some concern. However, I managed to convince myself that this was a side effect of some of the medications from which I was in the process of being weaned.

A worried wife

A couple of easy hours passed. Even though nothing was flying and no shots were fired, time slipped by in a pleasant and familiar manner, filled with the duck blind small talk and shared silences that come so easy and natural to pards.

While I was certainly happy to be back in a duck blind, I must confess to some uncertainty as to whether or not putting myself there was the right thing to do. Was I expecting too much, too soon, of a damaged heart muscle?

I knew my wife was at home worrying about me. After all she had been through, was it fair to her? Maybe it was time for a major lifestyle change. After all, I told myself, there are many things in life other than birds, black dogs, and shotguns.

We were getting a little cramped by this time, so Tim and his retriever Mindy left on a little walk to warm up and stretch some muscles. As they moved away into the fog, I left the blind and walked along a narrow strip of short grass that was just barely showing above the water.

Silver inside dome

At this time, conditions began to change. The sun was obviously out and trying without success to burn through the thick ground fog. I could look directly at the orb of the sun without discomfort. It appeared as a shiny silver dollar against a luminous light gray background. The blanket of fog that had pressed down on us all morning had lifted slightly and I found myself in a perfect little dome of clear air.

If I looked in any direction, including straight up, I could see the edge of the fog standing impenetrable at a distance of about 100 yards. There was no color whatsoever to the sky or the sun itself. Everything within my little dome was illuminated by a crystalline silver light, bright, but still diffuse so that there were no shadows.

I stood stock still at the end of the narrow grass peninsula enjoying the effect of the unusual light. I happened to be looking toward the north when a single duck suddenly popped out of the fog and into the clear air of the dome, flying directly toward me. The silver light seemed to accentuate its colors, and I could tell immediately that it was a drake widgeon.

I was standing upright, totally exposed, the grass no higher than my ankles, yet the drake came on strong and steady. Its wingbeat never changed, it never looked right or left, it didn't flare, and it just came right at me 40 yards in the air.

Silent shot

I had no sensation of bringing the gun up, taking the safety off, or tracking the path of the bird. I remember marveling at the brilliant colors, the white belly, the rich chestnut chest, the iridescent green speculum set off by the adjacent white wing patch.

Suddenly the bird collapsed and died in full flight directly overhead. I heard no report, nor did I feel any recoil. The widgeon sailed off behind me, hit the water, and lay perfectly still without so much as a twitch.

I stood and looked at it for a log time, until all the ripples had subsided, and the mirrorlike surface had reformed on the pond. I looked to the north towards Tim and Mindy. I expected them both to be looking back at me, taking in the action. They were only about 100 yards away, and to my surprise, still moving slowly away with no indication that either one of them had heard either the gunshot or the bird hitting the water.

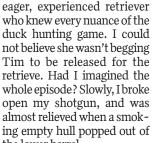

Mindy was an intense,

Gradually, I began to realize that something more than the death of a lone widgeon had occurred. It has been many years now since the waterfowl season of 1986 has come and gone. By all conventional measures, that particular season would have to be ranked as the least productive of the 50 or so that I have had the privilege of participating in. Practical Nursing Course Hopefully Will Solve One Shortage at Keizer Hospital

When a $10,000 basement remodeling project at North Bend's Keizer Memorial is completed next October, it will mark the end of a 10-year period in which more than $300,000 worth of improvement projects have been completed at the hospital, Ernest Frye, hospital administrator, said today. Since 1953, when administration of the hospital was taken over by a non-profit nine-man board of directors staff from Dr. Ennis Keizer, both floors of the two-story structure have been completely remodeled. Modern nursing stations on each floor have been added, patient rooms brightened with replastering and paint, and a new lighting system installed.

The financing has been accomplished through bank loans and donations.

One of the biggest problems the North Bend hospital is faced with now, says Frye, is the lack of trained nurses.

"If a dozen registered nurses walked in here now looking for jobs, I'd hire all of them," he commented.

The hospital, in an effort to find a solution to the nursing shortage, is instituting a licensed practical nursing course in co-operation with South Western Oregon College.

Fourteen students have signed up for the course which begins Sept. 4 and ends in August of 1963.

The prospective LPN's will receive extensive training both in the classroom and in the hospital.

After the fourth month of training, the students will receive 65 cents an hour from the hospital for time spent in training at the hospital.

Frye estimates that each student will be able to earn $600 through this method. He says this should easily cover the cost of college tuition fees, books and uni-

Classroom instruction for the LPN course which will be taught by Mrs. Isabelle La Fond will include theory and practice in nursing procedures; charting for home and nursing homes; nursing ethics; vocational adjustments; body structure and function; nutrition; diet; therapy; introduction to medical and surgical nursing; maternal and child care and proper use of drugs.

Stop hounding students to pay for UO building

The University of Oregon is taking heat for a decision to pay a political consultant $25,000 for advice on how to get students to reverse a decision they've already made twice. Rightly so.

The university wants students to pay an extra $117 per term to help pay for renovations to Erb Memorial Union, but the students have said no.

The consultant suggests labeling opponents as "narrow-mindand "stubborn." It suggested an additional $30,000 be spent on backpacks, T-shirts and sunglasses to promote a yes vote.

Each student is being asked to spend an additional $1,404 over four years. It seems pretty reasonable to us that he or she could decide the cost isn't worth it.

They might also think the requested contribution isn't fair.

Imagine being a student at the university, walking by the magnificent recent additions to its sports facilities and wondering why the student union requires your extra dollars.

Gray heads may put Oregon in the red

As Oregon grays with the rest of the nation, the need for pricey medical service at all levels expands - exponentially among those requiring nursing home care or an expanding group suffering Alzheimer's disease. And the longer all Oregonians wait to prevent or forestall what seems inevitable debility, the more likely our older citizens will need institutionalized care that easily cracks $6,000 a month.

One in every eight Oregonians was 65 or older in 2005. But one in five Oregonians will be 65 or older by 2030 - an upsurge in the population that is inversely met by faltering state revenues and diminished capacity by agencies to provide elder services. Significantly, those trendlines join a recent projection that Oregon's current 76,000 Alzheimer's sufferers will multiply to 110,000 by 2025.

Nobody knows how much all this will cost. And the factors influencing Oregon's ability to support seniors keep multiplying. Even taxation figures in. An unknown number of seniors who enjoy a measure of wealth have incentives to leave Oregon to avoid taxes that wouldn't apply, say, in Washington or are assessed at half Oregon's rate in, say, Arizona. While nobody begrudges anybody's preferred retirement setting, the result of departing seniors with taxable money is to leave behind a needier elder class needing greater public subsidy from a needier state.

None of the challenges is new. But they couldn't be more acute now that the numbers are in and public dollars are scarce.

Repealing kicker is no solution

A citizens review committee of 24 members has voted in support of Measure 85, which would cancel the occasional "kicker" tax credits for corporations. The vote was 19-5, showing again that even a lopsided majority can be wrong.

In their report, the 19 said the measure "does not increase corporate taxes." Removing a credit does increase taxes, doesn't it?

The majority said: "It is unreasonable to refund legally due taxes to corporations as a result of inaccurate revenue projections." This makes it sound like the state gives away money because of some mis-

The legislature must budget based on what the state economists forecast. Then, if revenue comes in 2 percent higher than forecast, the kicker says the entire surplus gets returned to the taxpayers.

The kicker was meant to restrain spending. The trouble is that it does not allow the Legislature to build up a substantial reserve during good times.

What is needed, then, is a comprehensive reform that requires the state to save surplus revenue until a certain level is reached, then again return surpluses to all those who paid taxes - both personal and corporate.

The ballot initiative does nothing to solve the kicker issue. Once again sticking it to business that's about the only message approving this measure would send.

Can Romney stay focused on jobs?

It's an ongoing calamity, but one from which the political conversation is easily distracted. Paul Frasier, the DA, made a comment in an article in this paper about his prosecution of Marcene Rebeck, the midwife he is charging with criminal negligence in the death of a baby she delivered. His comment was that Marcene should be stopped from practicing midwifery "before anything else bad happens." I think this comment shows extreme bias and ignorance, and is enough evidence in itself to indicate that Paul Frasier should be stopped from practicing law before anything else bad happens, and at the least, that this case should be dropped. In making Marcene out to be a danger to the community, Frasier ignores the fact that she has a better track record of successful births than the mainstream medical profession. (Hospital births lose one baby out of 250 during the first week of life; babies successfully.)

If Frasier is really concerned about danger in the community, I suggest he take up the case of established medical practice in this country, where medical mistakes, including infections picked up in hospitals, are the third leading cause of death behind heart disease and cancer. Frasier's comment is also a blatant giveaway of his prejudiced campaign to sway the jury against Marcene. These are some of the reasons this case looks so much more like a persecution than a prosecution.

Anyone who knows Marcene, knows how thoroughly responsible she is and dedicated to helping mothers stay healthy and confident in their decision to have their babies at home. She deeply believes that birth is a natural process (as do the people who request her services), and not inherently a medical emergency, although she has called upon established medical assistance when there

Arnie Roblan has valuable expertise

I notice there have been quite a few Public Forum letters in support of state Senate candidate Arnie Roblan, but none for his opponent. This speaks to Rep. Roblan's popularity in the community.

As co-speaker of the Oregon House, Roblan attracted national attention last year for his ability to share power with his Republican counterpart, Bruce Hanna, also co-speaker of the House. A New York Times article praised Roblan and Hanna for their mutual cooperation. It isn't often that politicians receive praise, especially from a national newspaper.

Both co-speakers want what and they were willing to work together for the good of all. Roblan's bipartisan cooperation was symbolized by his willingness to concede the speaker's office to

According to Brenda Erickson of the National Conference of State Legislatures, it takes a certain type of personality to make a legislative tie work better. Roblan has proven term after term his spirit of bipartisan cooperation, whether the House is divided or not.

We can expect the same high level of political cooperation and expertise in the state Senate from Roblan that he evidenced as state representative. He has proven to have the willingness and experience necessary to look after our coastal interests in Salem. Voters, when you fill out vour ballots in November. remember Arnie Roblan for state Senate.

Some things are more important than politics

When New York Archbishop Timothy Dolan offers a benediction at the Republican Convention in Miami on Thursday, he will appear as a pastor, not a politician.

The distinction often gets lost when one finds oneself talking about issues that necessarily involve politics. It especially goes missing in media coverage, which thrives on conflict and contrast and categories, tilting toward black and white in a world often much more compli-

As president of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, Dolan has found himself in the forefront of a battle over the definition of religious liberty in America. He was among the first out of the gates criticizing the president's health care plan that includes coverage of abortion, among other things, and has been a consistent defender of religious freedom. The archdiocese of New York is currently suing the Department of Health and Human Services over the health care mandate, on grounds that it forces churches and other religious groups with large numbers of employees to violate their sacred beliefs. That's why it became a con> troversy when the cardinal invited President Obama to dinner. But unlike the commencement address dent at the

Kathryn LOPEZ

University of Notre Dame in 2008, where Obama suggested that conscience rights would be protected by his administration, this dinner isn't an honor, it's a fundraiser - for charities that this administration's policies have put in jeopardy. Faithbased social service organizations face crippling fines for noncompliance to the HHS mandate. In defending his decision to invite the president, Cardinal

Dolan described the dinner as a demonstration that people can gather in fellowship, "civility, and patriotism, to help those in need, not to endorse either candidate. Those who started the dinner 67 years ago believed that you can accomplish a lot more by inviting folks of different political loyalties to an uplifting evening, rather than in closing the door to them," Dolan continued.

As the Democratic convention in Charlotte is shaping up to become an ode to abortion rights - abortion being an "intrinsic evil" in Catholic teaching - the presence of Dolan on the political scene not as a political player, but as a teacher, is significant. Dolan reminds Catholics that they do not belong to a party but to something higher.

There should be robust debates about moral stewardship on all political issues, not just the ones dubbed "social." led by people of faith. Addressing basic moral principles, Dolan helps make this possible. Reminding people of faith who they are, what they believe and what that means for their lives, while reminding the political class who they represent, as well as reinforcing the traditional idea that freedom and democracy need religion. And that religion is more than a "safe harbor" as it was described on "Meet the Press" during this political cycle, but a call that requires our whole lives, even our political ones.

During the media coverage of a trip to Israel that involved freshman congressmen diving into the Sea of Galilee after imbibing alcohol, some were beside themselves. This is where Christ walked on water! But the sea isn't a holy water font, and Catholics and other people of faith believe it is our lives that are meant to be holy. This is the political issue that people of faith face: How can my vote protect the freedom to live as I'm called to? Dolan is working on it. He knows it's in the best interest of all of us to protect that right to true freedom.

Abby, permit me to share three reasons why I WANT to be "bothered" in the future:

First: The one who is ill is entitled to the care and support of his or her faith community. I have sat at the side of persons who appear nonresponsive, taken their hands and told them who I am. Their hand frequently tightens around mine. When I say familiar prayers, their lips move in concert with mine. Spiritual leaders of other faiths report similar experi-

When people come to me to discuss their wishes, I file that information in a secure place. (I also encourage them to share their desires with family and formalize them with an attorney or funeral director.) In at least one instance, the family purchased a burial plot through the funeral home, unaware that one had already been purchased in another cemetery of the person's own choosing.

I urge adult children and others in charge of another's affairs: PLEASE contact the faith community of the dying person – for the sake of the patient, the faith community and yourself. -A PASTOR INWISCONSIN

Tending to Space pioneer Neil Armstrong dies at 82

■ Nation recalls moon walk, NASA accomplishments

> By Lisa Cornwell and SETH BORENSTEIN The Associated Press

CINCINNATI - Neil Armstrong made "one giant leap for mankind" with a small step onto the moon.

He commanded the historic landing of the Apollo 11 spacecraft on the moon July 20, 1969, capping the most daring of the 20th century's scientific expeditions and becoming the first man to walk on the moon.

His first words after the feat are etched in history books and the memories of the spellbound millions who heard them in a live broad-

"That's one small step for man, one giant leap for mankind," Armstrong said. He insisted later that he had said "a" before man, but said he, too, couldn't hear it in the version that went to the Armstrong, who had bypass surgery earlier this month, died Saturday at age 82 from what his family said were complications of heart procedures. His family didn't say where he died; he had suburban lived in Cincinnati.

He was "a reluctant American hero who always believed he was just doing his job," his family said in a statement.

The moonwalk marked America's victory in the Cold War space race that began Oct. 4, 1957, with the launch of the Soviet Union's Sputnik 1, a 184-pound satellite that sent shock waves around the world. The accomplishment fulfilled a commitment President John F. Kennedy made for the nation to put a man on the moon before the end of Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin spent nearly three hours walking on the lunar surface, collecting samples, conducting experiments and taking photographs.

"The sights were simply magnificent, beyond any visual experience that I had ever been exposed to," Armstrong once said.

In those first few moments on the moon, Armstrong stopped in what he called "a tender moment" and left a patch to commemorate NASA astronauts and Soviet cosmonauts who had died in action.

Although he had been a Navy fighter pilot, a test pilot for NASA's forerunner and an astronaut, the modest Armstrong never allowed himself to be caught up in the celebrity and glamour of the space program.

"I am, and ever will be, a white socks, pocket protector, nerdy engineer," he said in 2000 in one of his rare public appearances. "And I take a substantial amount of Rice University historian Douglas Brinkley, who interviewed Armstrong for NASA's oral history project, said Armstrong fit every requirement the space agency needed for the first man to walk on moon, especially because of his engineering skills and the way he handled celebrity by shun-

"I think his genius was in his reclusiveness," said Brinkley. "He was the ultimate hero in an era of corruptible men."

Fellow Ohioan and astronaut John Glenn, one of Armstrong's closest friends, recalled Saturday how Armstrong was on low fuel when he finally brought the lunar module Eagle down on the Sea of Tranquility.

"That showed a dedication to what he was doing that was admirable," Glenn

Armstrong's moonwalk capped a series of accomplishments that included piloting the X-15 rocket plane and making the first space docking during the Gemini 8 mission, which included a successful emergency splashdown.

In the years afterward, Armstrong retreated to the quiet of the classroom and his southwestern Ohio farm. In an Australian interview earlier this year, Armstrong acknowledged that "now and then I miss the excitement about being in the cockpit of an airplane and doing new things."

The 1969 landing met an audacious deadline that President Kennedy had set in May 1961, shortly after Alan Shepard became the first American in space with a 15minute suborbital flight. (Soviet cosmonaut Yuri A. Gagarin had orbited the Earth and beaten the U.S. into space the previous month.)

The third astronaut on the mission, Michael Collins, circled the moon in the mother ship Columbia 60 miles overhead while Armstrong and Aldrin went to the moon's surface.

"He was the best, and I will miss him terribly," Collins said through NASA.

In all, 12 American astronauts walked on the moon before the last moon mission

Recent research bolstering evidence that circumcision reduces chances of infection with HIV and other sexually spread diseases, urinary tract infections and penis cancer influenced the academy to

Their old stance said potential medical benefits were not sufficient to warrant recommending routinely circumcising newborn boys. The new one says, "The benefits of newborn male circumcision justify access to this procedure for those families who choose it." The academy also says pain relief stronger than a sugar-coated pacifier is essential, usually an injection to numb the area.

The federal Centers for Disease Control and Convention has estimated circumcision costs range from about $200 to $600 nationwide. Coverage varies among insurers and several states have stopped Medicaid funding for circumcisions.

Prevent osteoporosis with the right kind of exercise

Doctor K

Anthony

Komaroff

DEAR DOCTOR K: I've read that certain types of exercise help prevent osteoporosis. What types are best? How do they prevent bone Ask loss? DEAR READER: Osteoporosis is a disease that weakens bones and makes them more susceptible to breaks. Bones are very dynamic. Inside every bone, some cells are laying down new bone and other cells are chewing up old bone. You want these bone-building and bonedestroying forces to always remain about equal, and for most of our young and early adult lives they are. But as we get older, the bone-destroying forces become slightly stronger than the bone-building forces. That's when osteoporosis begins.

Weight-bearing exercises and strength-training exercises can help prevent osteoporosis, by boosting the bone-building forces. Weight-bearing exercises force you to support your own body weight. Examples include walking, dancing and climbing stairs. These exercises stress your bones enough to stimulate new bone growth.

Strength (or resistance) training challenges muscle to strain against an opposing force. Resistance can be supplied by your body weight, free weights, elasticized bands or machines. These exercises can strengthen your bones as well as your muscles.

Exercise also offers indirect benefits that can help protect against fractures. Strength training increases muscle mass, which in turn enhances muscle control, strength, balance and coordination. Good balance and coordination can mean the difference between falling and suffering a fracture - and staying on your feet.

Generally, higherimpact activities have a greater effect on bone than lowerimpact exercises. Activities such as tennis or running build bone faster than walking or low-impact aerobics. Velocity is also a factor. Jogging or fastpaced aerobics do more to strengthen bone than a leisurely stroll.

Swimming biking are excellent ways to keep fit, but they aren't weight-bearing, so they won't improve your bone mass or density.

Also, only bone that bears the load of the exercise will benefit. For example, walking or running protects only bones in your lower body. A welldesigned strength-training program can target the sites most likely to sustain fractures from osteoporosis: bones of the hip, spine and arms.

Aim to get at least 30 minutes of weight-bearing exercise a day. It doesn't have to be 30 consecutive minutes. Two brisk 15-minute walks - from where you park your car to your workplace, for instance – can do the trick. Walking up and down the stairs multiple times a day, at work or at home, also contributes to the daily quota.

If you already have osteoappropriate.

Attacks in Kabul lead to 27 Afghan, 2 U.S. soldier deaths

By Heidi Vogt and MIRWAIS KHAN

The Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan -Attackers hit international forces, the Afghan army and Afghan civilians in two days of violence that by Monday morning had left 29 people dead - two of them Americans soldiers killed by an Afghan colleague.

In the deadliest attack, insurgents beheaded 17 large group that had gath-Afghan civilian for taking part in a music event in a Taliban-controlled area of southern Afghanistan, officials said. The attack happened Sunday night in Helmand province's Musa Qala district, said provincial government spokesman Daoud Ahmadi. All of the bodies were decapitated but it was not clear if they had been shot first, Ahmadi said.

The victims were part of a Then on Monday morn-

Isaac crossing Gulf with New Orleans in crosshairs

BY MATT SEDENSKY

The Associated Press

KEY WEST, Fla. - Tropical Storm Isaac targeted a broad swath of the Gulf Coast on Monday and had New Orleans in its crosshairs, bearing down just ahead of the seventh anniversary of Hurricane Kat-

"I gassed up - truck and generator", John Corll, 59, a carpenter, said as he left a New Orleans coffee shop Monday morning. He went through Katrina in 2005 and was expecting a weaker storm this time, adding that he thinks the levee system is in better shape to handle a storm surge than when Katrina hit. "I think the state and local governments are much better prepared for the storm surge and emergencies," Corll said.

Isaac blew past the Florida Keys and was rolling northwestward over the open Gulf of Mexico on Monday. The National Hurricane Center predicted it would grow to a Category 1 hurricane over the warm water and possibly hit late Tuesday somewhere along a roughly 300-mile stretch from the bayous southwest of New Orleans to the Florida Panhandle.

of seven years after Katrina struck catastrophically in 2005, although Katrina was a much stronger Category 5 storm with winds over 157 miles per hour. Isaac is expected to have top winds of around 90 mph when it hits

The size of the warning area and the storm's wide bands of rain and wind prompted emergency declarations in four states, and hurricanetested residents were boarding up homes, sticking up on food and water or getting ready to evacuate.

On the Alabama coast, Billy Cannon, 72, was preparing to evacuate with several cars packed with family and four Chihuahuas from a home on a peninsula in Gulf Shores. Canon, who has lived on the coast for 30 years, said he thinks the order to evacuate Monday was premature.

"If it comes in, it's just going to be a big rain storm. I think they overreacted but I understand where they're coming from. It's safety," he

The storm that left eight dead in Haiti blew past the Florida Keys with little damage and promised a drenching but little more for Tampa, Isaac could pack a watery doublze punch for the Gulf Coast. If it hits during high tide, Isaac could push floodwaters as deep as 12 feet onto shore in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama and up to six feet in the Florida Panhandle, while dumping up to 18 inches of rain over the region, the National Weather Service warned.

ing space to vendors. This year, Clarkson guesses the association will earn around $4,000. It will use that money to fund its annual promotional events.

They'll be back

This was the Blackberry Art's Festival's 30th year in downtown Coos Bay. Clarkson said some of the vendors are new, while others have been returning for years. She has seen an increase lately in recycled art for sale at the event.

Then there are booths displaying traditional painting, ceramics and photography. Some vendors do woodworking; others make children's toys.

Several stations sell fudge and ice cream, and the Kiwanis Club grills meat sticks as its annual fundraiser. And you can't forget the jewelry, clothes, purses and stained glass work offered here every year.

Viki Haworth and her husband sell patented no-braid hair wraps that combine leather strips with long beads to hold hair in place.

You can't buy these online, Haworth said. But they'll be back at the Blackberry Arts Festival next year.

they would go out and do things. I would just work all day and go home and sit in my house.

"If I did go out and do something, the whole time I'd be thinking, 'I don't want to be here, I want to get out of

"I realized that that's not normal and that I needed help. I couldn't fix myself, and that's when I reached out to a therapist, and that really changed my life."

Apology was 'genuine'

The lawsuit resulted in a settlement, which included $480,000 and a public apology at the pulpit of the parish where the abuse took place.

Surrounded by family, friends and parishioners, Horning listened to that apology with tear-filled eyes. She said she was relieved to hear it, although she said it was different than what was agreed upon in the settlement.

"It didn't stick to what we said in our agreement, but I'm not going to begrudge it," she said.

"I'm thankful that they did it and that's what matters the most. I do appreciate Monsignor O'Donovan; I do feel that he was genuine and I thanked him for relaying it. It couldn't have been easy for him to do that."

Hopes to help others Nothing regarding the situation is easy, but Horning said feelings of relief are real.

"There's relief, definitely, that this weekend is over," she said.

"And there's hope. Hope that it helped other people there. I had so many women come up to me and tell me that they were abused. Some of them had never told anyone about it before telling me, and that's just so Incredible to me.

"That gives me hope. I don't want someone else to live for 20 years like I did, In silence and shame because this wasn't there fault

'Sadness and regret'

According to the apology read by O'Donovan, once the abuse was brought to the attention of the archdiocese, it went about trying to fix, and heal, as quickly albeit quietly as possible.

"Along with these efforts and this apology come my sincere hope and prayer for the healing of Ms. Horning and all who may have been Injured by the actions of Father Altstock or any priest of this Archdiocese,"

"On a personal note, I also express my sadness and regret for what happened, and I think the priests of this archdiocese feel the same way," he said. "With something like this, it's a difficult, painful, painful situation. I just want you to know we feel terrible. We pray, for Ms. Horning or anyone who was injured, every day."

Final major starts today for tennis

NEW YORK (AP) — Champion at Wimbledon in both singles and doubles. Winner again at the All England Club in both events, four weeks later at the London Olympics.

Nobody would blame Serena Williams if she felt worn down by this year's jam-packed tennis calendar. She doesn't see it that way, though – even with the grind of the U.S. Open looming.

"I look forward to this," Williams said. "It's almost as like a launching pad for what I want to do for the rest of the hard-court season."

In a way, yes, today's start of the year's last Grand Slam actually marks something of a new beginning – the kickoff of a six-month stretch on the hard courts that winds down at the 2013 Australian Open.

Call it mental gymnastics, a creative way of looking at things or whatever else might apply. What can't be denied is that in an Olympic year, the U.S. Open - considered the toughest test in tennis even under normal circumstances - is essentially the season's fifth major.

"A lot of them," Jim Courier said, "are running on fumes."

Indeed, many top players have had to double down on their fitness and find new, creative ways of organizing their schedules to get ready for what they hope will be a two-week grind in the fishbowl that is Flushing Meadows.

Defending champion Novak Djokovic barely took any time off following his fourth-place finish at the Olympics. He traveled to Toronto for a hard-court tuneup, played six matches and won the tournament.

Then, he flew to Cincinnati, played six more matches but lost to Roger Federer in the final. No shame there, though that loss to Federer did include an uncharacteristic 6-0 whitewashing in the first set.

"Mentally, I wasn't there, wasn't fresh," Djokovic said. "It had been a very busy time starting at the Olympic Games, and maybe that caught up with me at the end."

No big deal in Cincinnati. But a half-hour mental lapse in New York could mean the end of Djokovic's quest to win what has, essentially, shaped up as the tiebreaker major for 2012.

Second-seeded Djokovic won the Australian Open. Rafael Nadal won the French Open. Top-seeded Federer won Wimbledon. Just for good measure, third-seeded Andy Murray won the Olympics, meaning the U.S. Open could essentially determine the player of the year in men's tennis. Some combination of Nadal – absent this year because of a knee injury – and the other three have occupied every spot in the finals of the past eight Grand Slam tournaments. Who has the most to gain over this fort night? John McEnroe thinks it's Murray, who has the Olympic gold, but is still in search of his first Grand Slam title.

"The way it pans out, it's conceivable that Murray could make an argument were he to win this ... that you could say he's the best player in the world this year," McEnroe said. "To me, that's an unbelievable upside."

Murray opens today in Arthur Ashe Stadium against Alex Bogomolov Jr., of Russia.

Federer, back at the top of the rankings after 25¹/₂ months during which Nadal and Djokovic took the spot from him, has a night match against American Donald Young, who is 3-21 this season.

Federer says there's a difference between how he feels now and last year, when he had two match points in the semifinals against Djokovic, but lost both and closed out his first full season since 2002 without a Grand Slam title.

"I think I felt good last year, but probably felt that maybe, at times, the matches were not always on my racket," he said. "Whereas maybe this time around, I feel like if I'm playing well, I can dictate who's going to win or lose."

Though the women's game has been more in flux than the men's of late – seven different winners over the past seven Grand Slams — the math is essentially the same in 2012: Three of the top four women - No. 1 Victoria Azarenka (Australia), No. 3 Maria Sharapova (France) and No. 4 Williams (Wimbledon) – have major titles this year and all need this one to break the tie.

Rough racing returns to Bristol

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — With a two-handed toss of his helmet. Tony Stewart brought back everything that had been missing at Bristol Motor Speedway.

It was the rock 'em, sock 'em style of racing that made the Tennessee bullring the toughest ticket in NASCAR, and fans fill the place for 55 consecutive races hoping to see bumping and banging on the track and the off-track drama it created.

Progressive banking added in 2007 diluted the action, and fans turned their backs on Bristol in droves. Yet another disappointing crowd in March was the final straw for track owner Bruton Smith, who ordered changes to the track surface in the hopes the action would pick up and the fans would return.

He got exactly what he wanted Saturday night, even if his idea didn't go exactly according to Tempers flared again at Bristol the boiling point coming when Stewart heaved his helmet at Matt Kenseth's car after the two wrecked racing for the lead - and the action on track picked up enough to satisfy most fans.

Five-time Bristol winner Jeff Gordon, who watched some of Bristol's greatest races from the spotter stand before he began his Cup career, thought Saturday night looked a lot like old Bristol.

"Even though it was really tough to pass, it just reminded me of old school Bristol," Gordon said. 'I think it was a success and I certainly had a lot of fun. I say they grind the whole place. Sounds awesome. I hope they do that next Believing the progressive banking had created too many lanes for drivers to use, Smith ordered the top groove to be ground down at Bristol. His desired effect was a tighter track that forced drivers to run around the bottom and use their bumpers to move cars out of their way.

They had to use their bumpers, but it was at the top of the track where the action occurred. The new top groove picked up rubber as the race progressed, and the grip in the high line was too attractive for drivers to ignore.

Denny Hamlin, who picked up his first Bristol victory, thought the racing was similar to years past.

"We were all running in a line and just waiting on the next guy to screw up to get around," he said. "That's what you had with the old Bristol. That's how we had to race. I don't think we saw as much sideby-side racing, but you didn't see side-by-side racing with the old Bristol. You just saw a bunch of cars in line waiting on someone to get knocked out of the way or mess up and that's the same thing we had."

With it came the return of a vintage Stewart reaction following his accident with Kenseth.

The three-time series champion had rallied from a lap down to run for the lead with Kenseth, but after the two came close to wrecking for at least an entire lap, they finally collided for reasons neither agreed upon. Stewart showed his displeasure by tossing his helmet at Kenseth's car, and promising a rocky ride the rest of the season.

"I'm going to run over him every chance I've got from now 'til the end of the year, every chance I've got," Stewart said.

That's the kind of responses fans expect at Bristol, where Dale Jarrett in 1993 threw his helmet at Bobby Hillin Jr.'s car. Ward Burton once threw his heel guards at Dale Earnhardt Jr., Jimmie Johnson made an obscene gesture, Gordon shoved Kenseth, Kevin Harvick charged after Greg Biffle, and, oh, the late Dale Earnhardt spun Terry Labonte in an effort to "rattle his cage."

On Saturday night, even Danica Patrick got into the action, angrily wagging her finger at Regan Smith after contact from him caused a race-ending wreck after she'd worked her way to 19th.

"We were just racing hard, this is Bristol, this is why people love this track because you see a lot of that, you see tempers flare," Patrick said.

"It's a beautiful place," said John Nelson. "I love the way its tucked in with the trees. And we have wonderful people down here to work with."

Nine drivers made the trip to Coos Bay, one of several stops for

"We all work together - we help each other out," Nelson said. The drivers have a common round of an LPGA event. She played like she had been there before." Ko became the youngest winner in LPGA Tour history and the circuit's fifth amateur champion Sunday, closing with a 5-under 67 for a three-stroke victory over Inbee Park.

"To break another record, or being in the history, it's amazing, and it's always awesome to be able to play with the pros," Ko said. "The last few holes, it got a bit nerve-racking, but Stacy Lewis, after my birdie on 15, she said, 'You know you can do it? It was really great to have another player that I look up to giving me that much support. It was really awesome."

The South Korean-born New Zealander broke the age record of 16 set by Lexi Thompson last September in the Navistar LPGA Classic in Alabama, and is the first amateur winner since JoAnne Carner in the 1969 Burdine's Invitational.

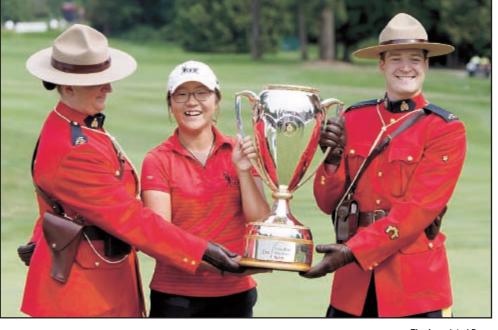

The glove Ko wore in the final round will be displayed in the World Golf Hall of Fame.

"To have something that's mine to be up there, it's amazing, and it doesn't come down or anything," Ko said. "So it will always remain there, and it'll be a good memory."

In January, Ko won the New South Wales Open in Australia at 14 to become the youngest player to win a professional tour event, a mark broken by 14-year-old Brooke Henderson in June in a 36-hole Canadian Women's Tour event in Quebec.

Ko also won the U.S. Women's Amateur.

He knows - he won in the group's first trip to Coos Bay last summer.

Barr's truck was perhaps the most unique, because it is a few decades older than any of the others.

"I found it parked next to a cornfield," Barr said, adding that this particular truck was fitting for him. "My grandpa worked with Internationals all his life."

Barr has been racing with the series for three summers, while Nelson has been with the group a few more seasons.

"It's a lot of fun," he said.

"I own my own highway truck. It's two totally different worlds."

As for speeds, the truck drivers aren't sure just how fast they can go. The only indicators inside the cabs are oil pressure and temperature the things the drivers most need to keep their eyes on, Nelson said.

Among the local drivers in the Les Schwab Championship Series, Mike George won the main event for late models, Trina Post finished first in the sportsman class, Steve Dubisar won for street stocks, Rob Lauver was far better than the rest of the field for mini outlaws in a Volkswagen bug and Tom Jenotte won for hornets.

Drake Nelson, the speedway's general manager, said the crowd was solid Saturday night.

"People like to watch the monster trucks and they like to watch the novelty events," he said. "All in all, I think it was good."

The speedway hosts another novelty event for the coming Labor Day weekend, when traveling dwarf cars are in town for races both Saturday and Sunday.

Manning looks sharp Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER -Peyton Manning was magnificent in his final regular-season tuneup Sunday, throwing his first two touchdown passes for the Denver Broncos in a 29-24 loss to the San Francisco 49ers.

Manning completed 10 of 12 passes for 122 yards, including TD tosses of 10 and beat Indianapolis in a 5 yards to Eric

Decker, and was nearly perfect. The two misses dropped pass by Joel Hilton for the Colts (1-2) Dreessen and an errant pass to Brandon Stokley, who was for 17 for 74 yards and a 4held on the play but didn't draw the flag.

After managing one TD to go with four turnovers in his first seven possessions this preseason, Manning drove the Broncos (1-2) to scores on all three of his possessions, then put on his visor with 46 seconds left in the first quarter after staking Denver to a 17-0 lead.

Alex Smith threw a 49yard TD pass and David Akers kicked five field goals for the Niners (2-1), who outscored the Broncos' backups 19-0 in the second half but lost wide receiver Ted Ginn Jr. to an ankle injury early in the second half.

Panthers 17, Jets 12: Tim Tebow got the fans fired up with a dazzling 20-yard run in the fourth quarter for New York, but threw an interception three plays later and Carolina held on to win.

The Jets (0-3) haven't scored a touchdown through three preseason games.

Tebow faced a third-and-16 from the Jets 34 and ran around in the backfield, eluded a tackle attempt by Ryan Van Bergan and took off and slipped through a few other tackle attempts by the Panthers (2-1) before being taken down for a 20-yard gain by Reggie Smith. Tebow pumped both fists and yelled at the crowd chanting "Teeboww! Tee-boww!" But hand in Detroit's loss to three plays later, Tebow threw an easy interception to Smith.

Redskins 30, Colts 17: Andrew Luck and Robert Griffin III were both impressive Saturday as Washington matchup of the top two picks in the NFL draft.

No. 1 selection Luck completed 14 of 23 passes for 151 yards and a 31-yard touchdown to fellow rookie T.Y.

No. 2 pick Griffin went 11 yard scoring throw to Santana Moss.

Both played one series into the third quarter in the teams' dress rehearsal for the regular season, with the Redskins ahead 14-7 when the subs took over.

Ben Roethlisberger shook off a slow start by engineering an 11-play, 98-yard touchdown drive for the go-ahead score with a 6-yard pass to Brown at the end of the first half. Brown then opened the second half with a 39-yard touchdown catch from backup Byron Leftwich in helping the Steelers improve to 2-1.

Fred Jackson scored on a 1-yard plunge, and highpriced defensive end Mario Williams had two sacks for the Bills, who dropped to 0-3.

Pittsburgh rookie offensive guard David DeCastro had to be taken off the field on a cart with what coach Mike Tomlin called a "potentially severe" right knee injury. The Steelers said Saturday night they expected DeCastro to miss a significant amount of time.

Raiders 31, Lions 20: Matthew Stafford threw for 68 yards until leaving with an injury to his non-throwing Oakland.

Briscoe got past teammate Power out of a pit stop Sunday and held off the twotime defending Sonoma champion for his seventh career victory, capping a masterful weekend for Chevrolet and Penske

"We always get excited when we come to this race," Briscoe said. "For whatever reason, Team Penske cars are always strong. Will and I kind of dominated all weekend."

Timbers beat Whitecaps to stop drought

PORTLAND (AP) Franck Songo'o scored the go-ahead goal and the Portland Timbers snapped an eight-match Major League Soccer winless streak with a 2-1 victory over Pacific Northwest rival Vancouver on Saturday night

Songo'o's goal, his first with the Timbers, came on a free kick in the 55th minute that beat Whitecaps goalkeeper Joe Cannon.

Portland had not won since a 2-1 victory over San Jose on July 3. The Timbers also lost on penalty kicks to English Premier League side Aston Villa in a friendly on July 24.

"We're all happy now because it's been a long, long, long time since we've had a win," Songo'o said.

The Whitecaps (10-10-7) are fighting for a playoff spot but they've dropped three to the Sounders last weekend. Vancouver has lost five straight on the road.

The Timbers were 0-6-2 to win a Cascadia match since May 26, a match that was marked by a delay when a severe thunderstorm rolled Songo'o, a native of Cameroon playing in his first MLS season, scored on the free kick from about 25 yards out to put Portland ahead in the second half. Defender Steven Smith saved the lead in the 74th minute when he headed the ball out of the mouth of the goal.

"At halftime you could see a lot of the guys were frustrated from giving up that goal," Timbers captain Jack Jewsbury said. "We went back out there and we felt we could win it."

Winston Churchill said. "It is always wise to look ahead, but difficult to look further than you can see."

When the dummy comes down, we are all used to looking ahead through the 13 tricks to come. But it is difficult to see that far. We get a general idea of how the play will go and look ahead at each subsequent trick.

However, vou should also look ahead during the bidding. In today's deal, take a peek at the South hand.

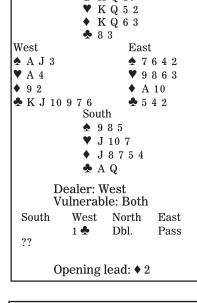

North

♠ K Q 10

West opens one club, North makes a takeout double, and East passes. What should South do? The choices are one diamond.

one no-trump and two diamonds. The jump to two diamonds is a slight overbid. Between one diamond and one no-trump, the latter has two pluses: First, it promises values (whereas one diamond might be bid with a Yarborough); second, it leaves South prepared for further competitive bidding by the opponents. Over one diamond or one no-trump, West will rebid two clubs. Then, if South had advanced with one no-trump, he could now comfortably continue with two diamonds. But after one diamond, South will be left with two diamonds. which is less descriptive. East might then compete to three clubs, but North would probably contest with three diamonds (although three clubs can be defeated by one trick). Assuming West leads a trump against three diamonds, East will win with his ace and shift to a club, causing South to lose one trick in each suit but make his contract exactly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) — Your loved ones will follow the example you set when you deal with them. If you are cranky, short-tempered or impatient, it isn't likely that your family life will be pleasant.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) — If you have to deal with a difficult person, it might be hard to keep your anger in check. It would be best to smolder in silence rather than respond in kind.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Financial arrangements with friends could cause problems. Should a disagreement arise over something material, suffer the loss rather than jeopardize the relationship. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) — Sometimes there is a fine line between being assertive and being just plain aggressive. If you're not considerate, you might have trouble distinguishing between the two.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) - Make sure that someone whose cooperation is essential to you is handled with the utmost diplomacy so that he or she doesn't become an adversary instead of an ally. GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Don't take something that you need repaired back to an establishment that gave you problems in the past. You'd be wise to look for a place that is more reliable.

Kid Scoop Together: The Drawing American Landmarks Game

How well do you and your friends and family know America's famous landmarks?

STUFF YOU'LL NEED

- drawing paper
- pencils
- timer
- landmark cards (below)
- 4 or more players, working in teams
- paper lunchbag

HOW TO PLAY

- 1. Cut out the landmark cards below and place in paper lunchbag. (You can make more once you've used all of these.)
- 2. Divide into two teams of two players or more.
- 3. Player from Team A pulls a landmark card from the bag without showing it to anyone else.
- 4. Team A player has 60 seconds to silently draw the landmark as Team A players shout out guesses. If they guess correctly before time expires, that's worth 10 points.
- 5. If no one on the team guesses correctly, then the other team has one guess. If they are wrong, move on to the next turn. But if they guess right, the team earns 20 points!
