A new local motorcycle group participated in the 14th annual Lighthouse Run hosted by Highway 101 Harley-Davidson. Here, the group heads out on the open road from the Umpqua River Lighthouse stop Saturday morning. The group of seven women are single, divorced or single with kids and new to riding. For their first time on the run, they are doing the 350-mile Iron Butt Run throughout the day, finishing up at The Mill Casino-Hotel.

Holy Redeemer's Father Karl heads to Ireland

NORTH BEND — After 16 years at North Bend's Holy Redeemer Church, the Rev. Karl Schray will be on the move.

On Sunday, about 300 people — parishioners, other clergy and community members — came by to wish him well during a four-hour reception at the church.

During his time in North Bend, Schray has supported and been active in many ecumenical projects and community groups. He's celebrated Mass for Shutter Creek inmates and brought the sacraments to the sick in hospitals and at home. He continues to lead Cursillo spiritual development retreats. He's been a faithful attendee of North Bend Drama Dogs performances and a supporter of Girl and Boy Scouts.

Bernie Swenson, president of the Altar Guild at Holy Redeemer, said, "You always could feel like he was a part of your family — a younger brother, an older brother or a good friend."

Members of Schray's actual family were in town for the reception — his cousin, the Rev. Tom Layton of Waldport, and his brother and sister-in-law, Keith and Jeanne Schray of Bethlehem, Pa.

They described Schray as a vigorous man who hiked the Pacific Crest Trail in the 1970s. Recently, at his 70th birthday gathering, he led a hike to a glacier-fed lake, then plunged in.

Describing Schray's three retirement events — a parish dinner, Sunday's reception and his final Mass next week — Jeanne Schray joked, "Three of them is hardly going to be enough."

"That's what Father Karl's best at — the community."

Born in Portland, Schray felt a call to the priesthood early.

"When I was a seventh grader, I heard a sermon and I said to myself, 'I would like to be like that man, that priest,'" he said.

"Prior to that, I wanted to be an archaeologist."

He told his parents, and they took him to the priest to discuss it.

"He said, 'Continue serving Mass, stay close to our Lord, and say a prayer every day to know what God wants you to do.'"

Snowden is said to seek asylum in Ecuador, Iceland

WASHINGTON (AP) — WikiLeaks officials say former National Security Agency contractor Edward Snowden has applied for asylum in Ecuador, Iceland and possibly other countries.

WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange says he cannot go into detail about Snowden's whereabouts except to say that he is safe.

Snowden left Hong Kong Sunday to travel to Ecuador through Moscow and other points to avoid extradition to the U.S. He is facing espionage charges stemming from his disclosure of U.S. surveillance programs that collect phone records and online data in the name of national security.

Snowden was not on a flight to Cuba today as expected. Ecuador says it is considering its asylum requests. Snowden had previously discussed seeking asylum in Iceland.

Assange's lawyer has said Snowden does not have many options for asylum.

Snowden, also a former CIA technician, fled Hong Kong on Sunday to dodge U.S. efforts to extradite him on espionage charges. Ecuador's Foreign Minister Ricardo Patino said his government had received an asylum request, adding today that the decision "has to do with freedom of expression and with the security of citizens around the world."

Ecuador has rejected the United States' previous efforts at cooperation, and has been helping Assange avoid prosecution by allowing him to stay at its embassy in London.

Snowden gave documents to The Guardian and The Washington Post newspapers disclosing U.S. surveillance programs that collect vast amounts of phone records and online data in the name of foreign intelligence, often sweeping up information on American citizens. Officials have the ability to collect phone and Internet information broadly but need a warrant to examine specific cases where they believe terrorism is involved.

Snowden had been in hiding for several weeks in Hong Kong, a former British colony with a high degree of autonomy from mainland China. The United States formally sought Snowden's extradition from Hong Kong to face espionage charges but was rebuffed; Hong Kong officials said the U.S. request did not fully comply with their laws.

The Justice Department rejected that claim, saying its request met all of the requirements of the extradition treaty between the U.S. and Hong Kong. During conversations last week, including a phone call Wednesday between Attorney General Eric Holder and Hong Kong Secretary for Justice Rimsky Yuen, Hong Kong officials never raised any issues regarding sufficiency of the U.S. request, a Justice representative said.

Music inspires girl's winning design

COOS BAY — Earlier this year, third-grader Samantha Cross got to hear a professional violinist and violist perform a KinderKonzert at Blossom Gulch Elementary School.

"It sounded like Beethoven," she said, trying to recall the experience. "It sounded good."

After the concert, she sat down and drew a picture.

That picture was chosen from dozens of other entries to be featured on the Oregon Coast Music Festival's "secondary" T-shirt this year, an honor previously bestowed only to professional artists.

The idea of using kids' artwork on the festival's fundraising T-shirts originated years ago with Roger Scott, former owner of Roger's Zoo in North Bend and a longtime festival supporter.

But it never came together until this year.

The KinderKonzert program is almost as old as the festival, which celebrates its 35th anniversary this year.

Every year, the Oregon Coast Music Association sends musicians into elementary schools to expose kids to music. They've included blues harmonica players and folk musicians as well as classical performers.

This year, Sterling Bank donated $2,000 to bring two musicians from the festival orchestra, violinist

Casey Bozell and violist Shelly Mathewson, to Coos County twice. They reached more than 1,100 students, including those who were homeschooled. After the concerts, students were invited to draw a picture about what KinderKonzerts or the Oregon Coast Music Festival meant to them.

A selection committee chose Samantha's design, which shows an octopus playing the xylophone and a crab singing.

On Friday, Oregon Coast Music Association board members Ron Metzger and Linnae Beechly, along with representatives of Sterling Bank, gave Samantha a T-shirt with

Construction will slow Highway 42S

Coos County motorists can expect traffic delays at these road construction projects this week, according to the Oregon Department of Transportation and the Coos County Road Department:
■ U.S. Highway 101, Milepost 233.4 to 234.5, McCullough Bridge rehab: Watch for intermittent weeknight lane closures across the bridge. Watch for flaggers. The speed limit on the bridge is reduced to 35 mph. Drive with caution. The sidewalk on the east (northbound) sidewalk will be closed until September.
■ U.S. Highway 101, mileposts 234-238, North Bend to Coos Bay paving, sidewalks and traffic signals: This project will replace four traffic signals in North Bend, upgrade sidewalks throughout the project area, improve drainage and pave four miles of U.S. Highway 101 between McCullough Bridge in North Bend and Fir Street in Coos Bay. Watch for intermittent daytime lane and shoulder closures along U.S. Highway 101 between Lombard and Washington. Pedestrians should watch for sidewalk closures. Watch for nighttime lane closures along U.S. Highway 101 and side streets between Stanton Avenue and Florida Avenue in North Bend due to drainage work. Watch youth by purchasing "money back guaranteed" fireworks from the Bay Area Church of the Nazarene's 12th annual Fireworks Fundraiser. ## Our view Legislation recently passed in the U.S. Senate does a good job of satisfying environmentalists. Word on potential logging in rural counties should be forthcoming.

What do you think?

The World welcomes letters. Email us at letters@theworldlink.com.

Finding an agreeable compromise to rural Oregon's decades-long timber harvesting dilemma isn't an enviable position. Both conservationists and industry advocates feel strongly they have the best approach to manage Oregon's forests. Add to that petty partisanship in Washington, D.C. and you have a recipe for ruin.

Oregon federal Sens. Ron Wyden and Jeff Merkley deserve tentative praise for their effort to preserve forest near Reedsport and extend federal timber payments through last week's Devil's Staircase Wilderness Act of 2013. However, what follows the passage of that bill — both in terms of a House vote and future legislation — is going to determine the amount of praise the senators deserve.

Senate Bill 352 preserves around 30,500 acres of "old-growth forest" between state Highway 38 and Smith River, in the Siuslaw National Forest. The pristine forest would be difficult to log anyhow, so its preservation as wilderness means both conservationists and the timber industry can be satisfied. After all, the territory already was home to the spotted owl and marbled murrelet, so it's unlikely harvest was going to be happening there in the near future.

Further, the Congressional Budget Office reports SB 352 will cost taxpayers very little and have even less effect on revenue.

Still, rural Oregonians have been asked to wait for a bill discussing what increased sustainable harvest would look like and where it should take place.

Oregon's senators deserve praise for progress they've made at the federal level this year, already passing more bills on wilderness use than the previous Congress — but that doesn't mean their work is finished.

Rural counties are severely hurting and have been for decades. The senators' next move should be laying out a clear logging plan that is as agreeable to conservationists as SB 352 is to the logging industry.

Doing so would show Wyden and Merkley are listening to all Oregonians and finding the best compromise for the state's future.

Let's have the surveillance debate

One diverting aspect of The Guardian-inspired hullabaloo over NSA surveillance has been watching people bicker about it on Facebook. In the old Soviet Union, people walked in the woods or hid in the bathroom with the faucets running to whisper forbidden thoughts. Here in the USA, people post them online along with cute kitten videos and photos of Reuben sandwiches.

Recently, I advised my Facebook friend Theo Jordan how to conduct an intrigue without government spooks catching on. Have a third party buy a prepaid cellphone anonymously, use it no more than twice, and then hide it in the backseat of a New York taxi. The Feds will go nuts tracking it over five boroughs, while you get busy digging holes.

Theo, I should stipulate, is a dachshund with an active fantasy life. We've never actually met.

GENE LYONS

Columnist

Meanwhile, some joker who hides behind the name of a character in a Henry James novel excoriates Democrats who haven't joined the Edward Snowden-Glenn Greenwald-Chicken Little Brigade. "Watching all the Obots turn into good Germans would be funny," he writes, "if it weren't so horrifying."

Achtung, "Lambert." You and Theo can use fake identities on Facebook, but The Shadow knows. Privacy in the 18th-century sense vanished with the Internet, and it's never coming back. It's childish to think otherwise.

Yes, NSA vacuums up telephone "meta-data" and sifts it for suspicious patterns. USA Today revealed that in 2006. There was a big political fight about it, which the libertarian side lost. But no, they aren't listening to your calls, and when the histrionic Mr. Snowden says he could have eavesdropped on anybody in the USA, he leaves out that doing so would have landed him in Federal prison, where he probably belongs.

As the New Yorker's Jeffrey Toobin asks "What, one wonders, did Snowden think the NSA did? Any marginally attentive citizen, much less NSA employee or contractor, knows that the entire mission of the agency is to intercept electronic communications."

Secondly, NSA has no direct "PRISM" link into the servers of Google, Yahoo, and the rest. Upon detecting suspicious activity, it must seek a search warrant, whereupon the companies isolate the information sought and deliver it to an electronic "lockbox" for collection. The Guardian simply got this wrong, and was very slow correcting itself, while Greenwald himself made characteristically shrill attacks on everybody who questioned it.

It's the difference between me leaving, say, my tax return in the mailbox and FBI agents covertly turning my home and office upside down in my absence. Day and night, legally speaking.

However, the genie won't fit back in the bottle. Like nuclear weapons, computer technology is here to stay. What with al-Qaida posting articles on its website teaching freelance jihadists like the Tsarnaev brothers to "Make a Bomb in the Kitchen of Your Mom," and Chinese hackers stealing industrial and military secrets by the truckload, unilateral electronic disarmament would be folly. An unmonitored Internet would be a conspiracist's playground.

For once, Thomas Friedman may be right: All that might be necessary to provoke a fear-based authoritarian political response in the U.S. would be a couple of mass casualty terror strikes on the 9/11 scale.

So let's definitely have that debate. Always mindful, however, of two things: First, the great enemy isn't methodology but lawlessness. When J. Edgar Hoover targeted Martin Luther King, he used not NSA computers but tape recorders the size of electric typewriters.

Two, cyber warfare beats the other kind hands-down.

The editorial staff at The World displayed their liberal bias. School employees not trustworthy enough to carry a gun are trusted with your children? I would rather have a teacher armed while being confronted "with a heavily armed gunman with nothing to lose" rather than the employees standing unarmed waiting to be slaughtered. Make it mandatory that the weapon be carried by the employee at all times while at school and the child will not get their hands on the gun. How many died at Sandy Hook waiting for the police to arrive? How many would not have died if there were employees carrying weapons?

One thing is true — they all died because no one present was prepared to hold off the gunman while waiting for the police to arrive. Unfortunately, the liberal press knowingly ignores those instances where armed citizens have stopped crazy killers. Eagle Point and the other communities do not require employees to carry guns, but as sane groups realize, armed employees protecting each other and children is a good idea and costs the taxpayers less than paying for police or armed guards who are nothing more than armed employees.

Engines for economic prosperity

Republican support for immigration reform focuses mainly on political self-interest. Since 71 percent of Hispanics and 74 percent of Asians voted Democratic last November, it's easy to see why smart Republicans are so concerned.

As Ron Bonjean, a prominent GOP strategist, told Reuters: "If Republicans refuse to pass comprehensive immigration reform, we will become obsolete as a party within 10 years."

But there is another compelling reason for Republicans to get behind the immigration bill now on the Senate floor. That measure — which would eventually legalize millions of undocumented foreigners and attract thousands of highly-educated scientists and entrepreneurs — strongly encourages economic growth. And that's exactly the goal Republicans say is their top priority.

Jeb Bush, the former Florida governor and possible presidential contender, made this precise point in a recent speech. "Immigrants create far more businesses than native-born Americans," he said. "Immigrants are more fertile ... and they bring a younger population. Immigrants create an engine for economic prosperity."

He's right. We need immigrants as much as they need us. Reforming the current system is not just an act of charity or humanity. It is an act of national self-interest.

A recent report from the U.S. Census Bureau forcefully reinforces this point. For the 12 months ending July 1, 2012, more non-Hispanic whites died in America than were born. That has not happened in at least a century and signals a long-term shift in the structure of the American economy.

"Today's racial and ethnic minorities will no longer be dependent on older whites for their economic well-being," William H. Frey, a demographer at the Brookings Institution, told The New York Times. The census data, he asserted, "makes more vivid than ever the fact that we will be reliant on younger minorities and immigrants for our future demographic and economic growth."

Republican hardliners continue to repeat the same old tired slogans: that a path to citizenship rewards lawbreakers, hurts American workers and drains the Treasury.

If they want to commit the sort of political suicide Bonjean describes, then fine, that's up to them. But they are wrong on the facts, and their position threatens the economic well-being of the rest of us. Here's why.

Start with the nature of the immigrant workforce. As the Manhattan Institute, a conservative think tank put it: "Immigrants have different skills and job preferences from native-born Americans, so they ... complement rather than substitute for native-born workers."

COKIE AND STEVEN V. ROBERTS

Specifically, immigrants earn fewer high school diplomas than established Americans, but more doctorates, particularly in the sciences. Lots of fruit pickers and computer programmers. As a result, the report concludes, "Immigrants increase economic efficiency by reducing labor shortages in low- and high-skilled markets." True, there is some competition for entry-level jobs between newcomers and natives, but "the economy as a whole gains, with substantially more winners than losers."

When immigrants become legalized, they earn higher incomes and pay more in taxes. Once they no longer have to hide, they can go to school, improve their language skills, qualify for better jobs, move more freely to seek work and bargain more effectively with their employers.

A study from the Center for American Progress, which leans left, estimates that legalization would increase immigrant incomes by 15 percent over 10 years. That translates into $392 billion in additional earnings and $109 billion in additional taxes. The Congressional Budget Office says this surge in economic activity would cut the federal deficit by close to $1 trillion over the next two decades.

And that's not the only benefit. Young immigrant workers can help shore up Social Security as aging baby boomers start retiring and stressing the system. "If undocumented immigrants acquire legal status," reports the Center for American Progress, "they will contribute far more to the Social Security system than they will take out and will strengthen the solvency of Social Security over the next 36 years."

As Jeb Bush points out, immigrants are far more likely to create businesses than established Americans. Attention focuses on the most visible examples — Google, Intel, eBay — but Korean greengrocers and Mexican landscapers also hire workers and generate economic activity.

Finally, the Senate bill would vastly increase the visas available for foreign-born scientists and engineers. These folks are so valuable to any economy that Canada recently erected billboards in Silicon Valley, urging discontented techies to move north if they were having legal troubles in the U.S.

If Republicans are really serious about what they say, if they really believe in economic growth, then they should enthusiastically support immigration reform.

Hosts feel slighted when left off their friends' guest list

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I invite our friends for dinner quite often, and invitations are always accepted. Recently, I began to notice that we are never invited to some of their homes for dinner.

I know entertaining isn't for everyone, but they do entertain other people — just not us. I'm not sure why this is. We would never go empty-handed. If we weren't asked to bring a dessert or an appetizer, we would at least bring a bottle of wine to thank our hosts, and I'd help to clear the dishes and straighten the kitchen when the meal is over.

Have you any thoughts as to why an invitation is never extended to us? — NOT ON THE "A" LIST

DEAR NOT: The problem may be that the couple is embarrassed that they can't entertain you as lavishly as you have entertained them. Or, they may have never been taught that it is rude to accept people's hospitality and not reciprocate in some way. Because they are friends, you should pose this question to them and ask for an honest answer.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for 19 years and this is the third time I have caught my wife cheating. I didn't catch her "in the act" because she disguised it behind "vacations with her girlfriends." What happened was I caught her sending some guy nude pictures of herself and lying about having stayed at a friend's house. (She had spent the night with a guy.)

I have remained in this marriage because I wanted to raise all my kids before separating or divorcing. I am leaving eventually, but want to stay four more years to raise my last son.

Is it immoral to lie and pretend like I want to work it out? I feel this is the best way not to damage my children. — RESPONSIBLE DAD IN GEORGIA

DEAR DAD: I don't think you should lie. Instead, talk calmly with your wife and tell her that it's clear to you that she isn't satisfied in the marriage or she wouldn't be doing what she has been doing. You might be able to accomplish what you want with your son through a joint custody arrangement — or full custody, if your wife wishes. That way, she could live her life as she apparently wants to, and so can you.

DEAR ABBY: My next-door neighbor lets her two children, a 6-year-old boy and a 7-year-old girl, run around naked all the time. This includes playing in her front yard and in the street.

I don't want to seem like a prude or cause problems in the neighborhood, but let's face it — there are perverts everywhere. At what age is it no longer acceptable for children to be nude in public? — TAKEN ABACK IN MONTANA

DEAR TAKEN ABACK: Children over the age of 3 should not be out in public with no clothes — and no child should be playing outside that way without supervision. For that matter, clothed or not, for their own safety children should not play in the street.

Your neighbor's lack of attention is irresponsible and inappropriate. If you can't make her see the light, then child protective services should be consulted.

Oregon State course aims at better brewing

CORVALLIS (AP) — With a clink of glass, a hiss of compressed air and a chunk of machinery, a line of beer bottles moved through the automated production line at Oregon State University's small on-campus brewery.

One by one the bottles were filled with frothing amber liquid and then capped as a group of people in white lab coats and beer-spattered safety glasses looked on.

Welcome to OSU's

Brewing Analytics Series, a trio of short courses for working brewers and serious amateurs looking to break into the industry: Microbiology for the Brewer, Beer Analyses and Quality Assurance.

The first two combine online course materials with labwork, while the third involves a tour of university and commercial hop and barley breeding operations.

Some 18 students from around the United States and Canada converged on Corvallis this week for the culminating sessions of the intensive classes.

"These courses were designed with the professional brewer in mind," said Tom Shellhammer, a professor in OSU's fermentation science program and the lead instructor for the Brewing Analytics Series.

"It doesn't really show you so much how to brew as how to do it right."

And a growing number of professional beer makers are looking to OSU for expertise in the production process. The university's fermentation science program has grown along with Oregon's reputation as a leader in the craft brewing field, with more than 200 undergraduate students enrolled last term.

Mark Maher just opened Feckin Brewery in Oregon City with his father. It's a big step, and he signed up for Brewing Analytics to shore up his brewing knowledge.

"I've been home-brewing for a couple of years — no formal training, just books and YouTube," said Maher, whose family also owns Maher's Irish Brew Pub in Lake Oswego.

"I learned a lot from other brewers, but coming here really helps me."

Jack Hendler, who co-owns Jack's Abby Brewing in Framingham, Mass., said he needed to upgrade his skills and the OSU class was the best fit for him.

Drug cartels' reach extends to Pacific Northwest

PORTLAND (AP) — Mexican drug cartels have infiltrated Oregon, and their reach has extended throughout the Northwest.

At least 69 drug trafficking organizations operate in the state, federal law enforcement sources told The Oregonian.

The sources say cartels control nearly every ounce of heroin, methamphetamine and cocaine flowing into the region.

The violence includes the unsolved 2011 death of a Canby man who police believe was killed by a bomb intended for another person connected to a cartel drug case.

Investigators also believe a cartel is behind a 2012 Salem roadside execution, the shooting of two California men found buried near Klamath Falls and a 2007 hit in which a trafficker and four friends were lined up on the floor of a Washington state rental home and shot in the head.

"Oregonians," said John Deits, the assistant U.S. attorney who oversees federal drug prosecutions in Oregon, "are totally naive, totally out of touch with what is happening."

The newspaper conducted more than 250 interviews with investigators in six states, reviewed 50,000 pages of documents, including wiretap excerpts and files in open homicide cases.

The newspaper said law enforcement sources cooperated because they're convinced the public needs to better understand the growing threat the region faces.

Police have taken down drug operations cloaked as a restaurant in Bend and a grocery in Hillsboro. They've busted traffickers in Gresham, Pendleton and, in a takedown last month involving 300 officers, in Klamath County. They've intercepted shipments from Oregon traffickers as far away as Texas, Minnesota and Florida.

Police also connected the death of 31-year-old Ivan Velasco Rodriguez, the Canby man, to twin explosions in central Washington, where rigged devices killed two men hours apart in 2008.

Investigators dug into Velasco Rodriguez's background but quickly concluded he wasn't the target of the bomb. They also found no disputes or drug activity involving the renter and his family. Then an explosives investigator discovered that the address where the bomb detonated had been listed by a man connected to a major drug case in another state.

That led federal law enforcement officials to suspect the work of a Mexican drug cartel.

Timber sale expands company's regional footprint

ASTORIA (AP) — The Weyerhaeuser Co.'s takeover of a competing landowner for $2.65 billion means the timber company is betting big on its foremost asset.

The company has struck a deal to buy Longview Timber, increasing its land holdings in Oregon and Washington by one-third, to 2.6 million acres, The Daily Astorian reported.

The transaction has the potential to increase timberland values in the region for other landowners and investors in the region, said Brooks Mendell, president of Forisk Consulting, which tracks timber finances.

"They're making a big statement about their confidence in log values and timberland assets," he said. "It makes people more confident in timberland values."

Weyerhaeuser paid more than $4,000 per acre. Nearly 70 percent of the inventory on the land is harvest-ready timber on flat, favorable terrain with a well-maintained road system.

The consolidation could be a concern for sawmills in areas where Weyerhaeuser is the predominant landowner, Mendell said. Those companies would have fewer competing suppliers.

"It's a market-by-market issue," he said.

The location is also desirable, particularly in light of the growing strength of California's housing market and the access to export markets in Asia.

Weyerhaeuser plans to raise about $2.45 billion to finance the transaction, half by taking on new debt and half by selling stock.

Patricia Biedent, the firm's chief financial officer, noted that Northwest holdings will represent about 40 percent of Weyerhaeuser's total land assets after the transaction.

"This geography is the most valuable on a per-acre basis," she said.

Kaine Horman awaits a hearing to renew his restraining order against ex-wife Terri Horman Friday in Portland. An Oregon judge has granted Horman, the father of a missing Portland boy a renewed restraining order against the man's estranged wife.

Kyron Horman's father wins renewed court order

PORTLAND (AP) — An Oregon judge has granted the father of a missing Portland boy a renewed restraining order against the man's estranged wife.

However, the woman's lawyer said Friday in court that she intends to contest it.

The order prohibits Terri Horman from having any contact with her husband, Kaine Horman, or their now 4 1/2 year-old daughter.

The Oregonian reports the court order has been renewed each year since the June 4, 2010, disappearance of 7-year-old Kyron Horman, Kaine Horman's son. The boy's stepmother, Terri Horman, told investigators she dropped the boy off at his Portland school. He hasn't been seen since.

No arrests have been made.

In his court petition, Kaine Horman says his estranged wife poses "a substantial safety threat." Her lawyer, Peter Bunch, told the court the petition allegations are "solely hearsay."

The Daily Astorian reports the business owners say the gillnetters aren't so quick to get their equipment repaired or replaced, or to pick up and pay for nets they've ordered.

Oregon and Washington have both adopted rules to move gillnetters to tributaries from the main stem of the Columbia, although gillnetters say they can't make a living on the tributaries.

The appeals court has stayed the rules while it considers the gillnetters' challenge.

Stolen wooden bear statue returned to bar

MILWAUKIE (AP) — A stolen wooden bear statue has been returned to a Milwaukie bar after an anonymous caller reported seeing it on Facebook.

The general manager of the Wichita Pub reported the beloved bear, a piece of chainsaw art, missing Friday morning.

Surveillance video from the pub and Facebook images led police to 25-year-old Corey Daniel Harris and 26-year-old Trevor Modar.

Nonprofit leader indicted on 14 charges

SALEM (AP) — The former head of a nonprofit aimed at helping people with disabilities has been indicted in state court on 14 charges, most alleging she stole from her organization.

The indictment of Janice Roberts alleges theft, aggravated theft and identity theft. 12 are related to the center she ran, Oregon Parent Information and Training Center.

The Oregonian reports its report on the problems led the state Department of Education to pull more than $500,000 in grant funding.

Lending money to friends and family

Over the years, I've heard from dozens of readers who have lent money to friends and family members, only to have become outraged when the deal goes sour. The problem is they write to me after they've made the loan and have been waiting months, even years, for repayment, without success, hoping I can wave a magic wand to get their money back. I always tell these readers that I wish they'd written to me earlier, before they lent the money. Doing things right from the start makes all the difference in the end. Here's how:

Embrace reality. Lend only the amount of money you can afford to give as a gift. Don't tell your potential borrower this, but know in your heart that the chances of you ever being repaid in full are fairly slim. That's a fact of life. There's a reason this borrower is coming to you and not to a bank or conventional lender to borrow money.

Promissory note. This is a legally binding document that when signed by both parties creates a contract. A promissory note lays out the details of repayment, including total amount to be repaid, due dates and penalties if the terms and conditions are violated. Search for "free promissory note" online to find a form you can simply print out and fill in the blanks.

Reasonable interest. It is right for you and the borrower that you charge a fair rate of interest. If your borrower balks at being charged interest, blame it on the IRS. If you give person more than $12,000 in a year, it will likely be treated as a gift and subject to gift tax. To avoid this potential complication on a larger loan, you must charge an interest rate that is at least as high as the IRS' Applicable Federal Rate, which is set monthly.

Require collateral. Require that your borrower "secure" this loan by pledging something of value that he or she owns, which has a perceived value of at least the amount of the loan. That could be a Rolex watch or a TV. Whatever it is, take possession of it. Hold it in lieu of repayment. Include this in your documentation, with a clear statement that, once the loan is repaid, the collateral returns to the borrower. And should the borrower default, the collateral becomes yours to liquidate for repayment of the loan.

Formal repayment plan. Because you do not want to become a debt collector or deadbeat chaser, agree on a repayment plan upfront before you hand over the money to your borrower. Do this while everyone is friendly and anxious to make this work. Let the borrower come up with a plan to which you can agree. A great idea is for the borrower to arrange automatic deductions from his or her bank account to yours. Now you won't have to wonder if the check is in the mail or if you'll need to make yet another awkward phone call.

Aerialist Nik Wallenda near the end of his quarter mile walk over the Little Colorado River Gorge in northeastern Arizona on Sunday. Wallenda successfully traversed the tightrope strung 1,500 feet above the chasm near the Grand Canyon in just more than 22 minutes, pausing and crouching twice as winds whipped around him and the cable swayed.

Wallenda walks tightrope high over Ariz. gorge

LITTLE COLORADO RIVER GORGE, Ariz. (AP) — Nik Wallenda studied the plunging walls of the Little Colorado River Gorge before stepping out on a quarter-mile tightrope cable. “Who! That’s an amazing view!”

With that observation, the well-known aerialist embarked Sunday afternoon on a walk without a safety net or harness, 1,500 feet above the Little Colorado River Gorge in northeastern Arizona.

The successful, 22-minute walk on the 2-inch thick cable was monitored by people around the world via television and computer screens during a broadcast of Wallenda’s most ambitious stunt yet.

They watched as the winds tested the Florida daredevil, and listened as he called on God to calm the swaying cable and as he paid homage to his famed great-grandfather. The stunt was the leading trending topic on Twitter on Sunday afternoon.

“It was unbelievable,” he told reporters later. “It was everything I wanted it to be. It was extremely emotional. I got to the other end and started crying.”

Hundreds of people watched from the remote site on the Navajo Nation in northeastern Arizona that led them past roadside vendors selling traditional jewelry and about a dozen protesters who consider the area sacred.

During his walk on the 2-inch-thick steel cable above the dry river bed near the Grand Canyon, Wallenda paused and crouched twice as winds whipped around him and the rope swayed. Gusts had been expected to be around 30 mph. He said they sent dust flying into his eyes.

“It was strenuous the whole way across. It was a battle. The winds were strong, they were gusty,” he told reporters. “But there was never a point where I thought, ‘oh my gosh, I’m going to fall.’”

Wallenda stepped slowly and steady throughout, murmuring prayers to Jesus almost constantly along the way. He jogged and hopped the last few steps.

“Thank you, Lord. Thank you for calming that cable, God,” he said about 13 minutes into the walk.

The Discovery Channel broadcast the event live. He wore a microphone and two cameras, one that looked down on the river bed and one that faced straight ahead.

High court sends back Texas race-based plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court has sent a Texas case on race-based college admissions back to a lower court for another look.

The court’s 7-1 decision today leaves unsettled many of the basic questions about the continued use of race as a factor in college admissions.

Justice Anthony Kennedy, writing for the court, said a federal appeals court needs to subject the University of Texas admission plan to the highest level of judicial scrutiny.

The compromise ruling throws out the decision by the New Orleans-based 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which upheld the Texas admission plan.

Kennedy said the appeals court did not test the Texas plan under the most exacting level of judicial review.

He said such a test is required by the court’s 2003 decision upholding affirmative action in higher education.

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg was the lone dissenter.

Justice Clarence Thomas, alone on the court, said he would have overturned the high court’s 2003 ruling.

Justice Elena Kagan stayed out of the case, presumably

Historic Gettysburg celebrates milestone

GETTYSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Gettysburg changed the direction of American history 150 years ago, and the town hasn’t been the same since.

The couple of hundred thousand visitors expected at events to mark the anniversary of the 1863 clash won’t have to look far to find remnants of the pivotal campaign of the Civil War, even outside the grounds of the meticulously maintained national park.

Cannonballs and shrapnel remain embedded in a few of the roughly 200 buildings that remain from the period.

Many of the businesses in the rural county seat cater to the throngs of tourists that stream into one of the country’s most historic places, from General Pickett’s Buffet to Abraham’s Lady, a battle-era clothing shop.

And residents can be eager to share their expertise — and their pride.

“To have one of the most iconic battles in the history of our country or the world to take place here and to have this historical heritage in our community is wonderful,” said Randy Phiel, the county’s top elected official and the logistics manager of an annual re-enactment. “This opportunity won’t come again. It’s our Olympic moment.”

Gettysburg was a quiet backwater in the mid-19th century, but roads connected it to all points on the compass, including south, where the Confederate Army under Gen. Robert E. Lee had launched his army to take the war to its northern opponents.

With a population of 2,400, about one-third its current size, the town was dominated by the carriage industry when war broke out, said Bob Alcorn, a 73-year-old Air Force veteran who leads walking tours of the town. The story that Confederates arrived in Gettysburg looking for shoes appears to be apocryphal, as there was not a single shoe factory in Adams County — though there were 30 in neighboring Franklin County.

These days, Gettysburg can feel a bit like an open-air museum, with people walking its streets in period garb. One reason for the lost-in-time feel is the park itself, which surrounds the town and chokes off much of what would certainly be miles of suburban development. A strip of development runs eastward on Route 30, but anyone hoping to build on land that can be seen from the park can run into preservation regulations.

The park offers locals the use of some 30 miles of bucolic roadways and vast open spaces as well as a constant string of cultural events, both on and off park property. About 400 such events are scheduled for June 28 through July 7.

The stream of visitors can put a crush on police, sanitation, road maintenance and emergency services.

The Gettysburg Convention and Visitors Bureau estimates visitors spent $605 million in 2011, generating $115 million in tax revenues and supporting 7,500 jobs.

“Most of the tourist-related jobs are lower-paying,” Phiel said. “They aren’t necessarily career-type situations.”

Ethanol debate heats up

WASHINGTON (AP) — It’s a dilemma for drivers: Do they choose a gasoline that’s cheaper and cleaner even if, as opponents say, it could damage older cars and motorcycles?

That’s the peril and promise of a high-ethanol blend of gasoline known as E15. The fuel contains 15 percent ethanol, well above the current 10 percent norm sold at most U.S. gas stations.

The higher ethanol blend is currently sold in just fewer than two dozen stations in the Midwest, but could spread to other regions as the Obama administration considers whether to require more ethanol in gasoline.

As a result, there’s a feverish lobbying campaign by both oil and ethanol interests that has spread from Congress to the White House and the Supreme Court.

Today, the Supreme Court rejected a challenge by the American Petroleum Institute, the oil industry’s chief lobbying group, to block sales of E15. The justices left in place a federal appeals court ruling that dismissed challenges by the oil industry group and trade associations representing food producers, restaurants and others.

Tom Buis, CEO of Growth Energy, an ethanol industry group, hailed the decision as victory for U.S. consumer, who will now have greater choice at the pump.

“Now that the final word has been issued, I hope that oil companies will begin to work with biofuel producers to help bring new blends into the marketplace that allow for consumer choice and savings,” Buis said.

The API had argued that E15 was dangerous for older cars.

Putting fuel with up to 15 percent ethanol into older cars and trucks “could leave millions of consumers with broken down cars and high repair bills,” said Bob Greco, a senior API official who has met with the White House on ethanol issues.

The ethanol industry counters that there have been no documented cases of engine breakdowns caused by the high-ethanol blend since limited sales of E15 began last year.

Afghans rush to learn risky art of defusing bombs

CAMP BLACK HORSE, Afghanistan (AP) — In a desolate field outside Kabul, an Afghan soldier hunches over a knee-high robot equipped with cameras, multidirectional pincers and tank-treads built for rough terrain. Carefully, he attaches four bottles of water and a tiny explosive charge to the robot. He uses a remote control to guide it 50 yards away to his target: a simulated backpack bomb.

A small dust cloud kicks up. If all has gone well, the blast has pushed the water into the bomb with enough force to knock out its triggering mechanism. But to be safe, his partner, Hayatullah, climbs into a heavy protective suit before lumbering over to pluck out the blasting cap and seal it in a fortified box.

The two men are among hundreds of Afghan soldiers training to take over the dangerous fight against the war’s biggest killers: the Taliban-planted bombs known as IEDs that kill and maim thousands of people each year on and around the country’s roads and towns.

A few years ago, there were almost no Afghan bomb disposal experts. Now, there are 369 — but that’s far from enough. The international coalition is rushing to train hundreds more before the exit of most coalition forces by the end of next year.

Each day on average, two to three roadside or buried bombs explode somewhere in Afghanistan, according to numbers compiled by the United Nations, which says that the explosives killed 868 civilians last year, 40 percent of the civilian deaths in insurgent attacks. Also, buried or roadside bombs accounted for 64 percent of the 3,300 international coalition troops killed or wounded last year, the NATO force says.

because she had some contact with it at an earlier stage when she worked in the Justice Department.

Abigail Fisher, a white Texan, sued the university after she was denied a spot in 2008. She has since received her undergraduate degree from Louisiana State University.

The challenge to the Texas plan gained traction in part because the makeup of the court has changed since the last time the justices ruled on affirmative action in higher education in 2003. Then, Justice Sandra O’Connor wrote the majority opinion that held that colleges and universities can use race in their quest for diverse student bodies.

O’Connor retired in 2006, and her replacement, Justice Samuel Alito, has shown himself to be more skeptical of considerations of race in education.

Another factor fueling Fisher’s lawsuit was that the university has produced significant diversity by automatically offering about three-quarters of its spots to graduates in the top 10 percent of their Texas high schools, under a 1990s state law signed by then-Gov. George W. Bush. The admissions program has been changed so that now only the top 8 percent gain automatic admission.

More than 8 in 10 African-American and Latino students who enrolled at the flagship campus in Austin in 2011 were automatically admitted, according to university statistics. Even among the rest, both sides acknowledge that the use of race is modest.

In all, black and Hispanic students made up more than a quarter of the incoming freshmen class. White students constituted less than half the entering class when students with Asian backgrounds and other minorities were added in.

The university said the extra measure of diversity it gets from the slots outside automatic admission is crucial because too many of its classrooms have only token minority representation, at best. At the same time, Texas argued that race is one of many factors considered and that whether race played the key role in any applicant’s case was impossible to tell.

Key vote on immigration set in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is preparing for a crucial test vote on a measure boosting border security along the U.S.-Mexico border and opening the door to citizenship for millions.

Ahead of the vote set for this evening, around a dozen Republican lawmakers had already indicated support, setting up a solid bipartisan margin of victory within reach of the 70 votes supporters are hoping for. All 54

Senate Democrats are likely to vote yes.

The measure includes changes to the original border security provisions in the bill that would double the size of the U.S. Border Patrol at a cost of around $30 billion and complete 700 miles of fencing. That compromise emerged last week after secret negotiations between Republicans and Democrats aimed at bringing more Republican senators on board.

South Africa: Mandela in critical condition

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — South Africa’s president today said a critically ill Nelson Mandela was “asleep” when he visited the 94-year-old in a hospital, and he urged the country to pray for Mandela, describing him as the “father of democracy” who made extraordinary sacrifices on behalf of his people.

President Jacob Zuma told dozens of foreign and South African journalists that doctors are doing everything possible to help the 94-year-old former president feel comfortable on his 17th day in a Pretoria hospital, but refused to give details of Mandela’s condition, saying: “I’m not a doctor.”

The briefing highlighted the tension between the government’s reluctance to share more information about Mandela on the basis of doctor-patient confidentiality, and media appeals for thorough updates on a figure of global interest. The government’s belated acknowledgement that an ambulance carrying Mandela to the hospital on June 8 broke down has fueled the debate about transparency versus the right to privacy.

Zuma’s briefing, held in a century-old Johannesburg mansion that now hosts conferences and other events, was also an indicator of the extent to which reports on Mandela’s health sometimes overshadow the business of the state. Under questioning, Zuma said President Barack Obama would go ahead with a visit to South Africa, despite concerns about Mandela’s health.

“President Obama is visiting South Africa,” Zuma said. “I don’t think you stop a visit because somebody’s sick.”

Obama, who arrives in Africa this week, will visit Senegal, South Africa and Tanzania.

Zuma, who in the past has given an overly sunny view of Mandela’s health, briefly spoke of his visit Sunday night to Mandela in the hospital in the capital. That visit was mentioned in a presidential statement on the same night that said Mandela, previously described as being in serious but stable condition, had lapsed into critical condition within the previous 24 hours.

The president said South Africans should accept that Mandela is old, and he urged people to pray for their former leader.

Wimbledon

Federer rolls to easy win

LONDON (AP) — Ten years after his first Wimbledon championship, Roger Federer began his bid for a record eighth title at the All England Club on Monday with the same dominance that has defined his grass-court greatness.

Opening the tournament on Centre Court as defending champion, Federer looked right at home as he dismantled Victor Hanescu of Romania 6-3, 6-2, 6-0 in just 68 minutes.

This was a grass-court clinic from Federer, who had 32 winners, seven aces and just six unforced errors. He won 90 percent of the points when he put his first serve in.

When his serve is clicking, Federer usually is unbeatable. On this day, he won 15 of his first service points and 24 out of the first 25.

Earlier, Wimbledon produced an upset in the women's draw when Puerto Rican teenager Monica Puig defeated fifth-seeded Sara Errani 6-3, 6-2.

Second-seeded Victoria Azarenka overcame a right knee injury after a scary fall, beating Maria Joao Koehler of Portugal 6-1, 6-2.

Azarenka screamed in pain after slipping and falling at the baseline in the second game of the second set. She sobbed on court and received medical treatment.

Playing the rest of the match with a heavy wrap on her right knee, Azarenka limped noticeably but managed to win comfortably against Koehler, making her Wimbledon debut.

No. 3 seed Maria Sharapova beat 37th-ranked Kristina Mladenovic of France 7-6 (5), 6-3.

Last year, Federer equaled Pete Sampras and William Renshaw with seven Wimbledon titles. He is now contending to become the first man to win the tournament eight times, which would bring his total of Grand Slam titles to 18.

In keeping with tradition, Federer had the honor of playing the first match on the sport's biggest stage as the reigning men's champion. This was the seventh time he strode out first on Centre Court.

"It's slightly different," he said. "Nine years ago when I came out the first time, it was the most special thing in the world. It still feels amazing. It was an absolute pleasure playing on Centre Court."

Federer came out wearing a white collared jacket with orange trim, then quickly got down to business. He never faced a break point and broke six times.

Federer has a habit of making things look easy. And so it was in the opening game when, stranded at the net, he reached behind him for a reflex forehand volley that landed in for a winner. In the third set, Federer lifted a perfect backhand lob over the 6-foot-6 Hanescu for a break and a 5-0 lead.

Three Rivers postpones doubleheader

THE WORLD

The Three River Sandblasters were forced to postpone their American Legion doubleheader against Post 20 today because of the wet weather.

The twin bill was to be the start of an eight-games-in-six-days stretch, all at Siuslaw High School, for Three Rivers.

Coach David Deutschman said Tuesday's game against the Springfield Titans also looks questionable.

The Sandblasters are trying to get back on the winning track after dropping both games of a doubleheader to Withnell Dodge on Thursday.

The Dodgers won the opener 12-2, limiting Three Rivers to four hits. Travis Gallagher had the only RBI for the Sandblasters and also pitched well, but didn't get much help from a defense that committed six errors, Deutschman said.

In the nightcap, Three Rivers pitcher Jake Thompson had trouble finding the strike zone, walking eight batters in a 9-2 loss. Thompson did have an RBI single in the first inning, driving in Mike Gill with one of just three hits by Three Rivers in the loss.

Martin Truex Jr. (56) leads Brian Vickers up a hill during the NASCAR Sprint Cup race in Sonoma, Calif., on Sunday. Truex won the race.

Truex ends 218-race victory drought

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — The post-race party was a blur after Martin Truex Jr.'s first win in 2007. The celebratory cool-down lap, the burnouts, the drive to Victory Lane all happened so fast.

So he planned to savor every minute of his next win.

He just didn't think it would take six years. Truex snapped a 218-race winless streak Sunday with an easy victory on the road course at Sonoma Raceway. It was only the second win of Truex's career, but it put Michael Waltrip Racing in Victory Lane for the second year in a row after Clint Bowyer won here last season.

Overwhelmed with emotion as he crossed the finish line, Truex made the celebration count.

"I was a freaking mess. It was terrible," he said. "I had to stop and start doing donuts because I couldn't think about what I was doing. I tried to key the radio once and I couldn't even talk. So I thought, 'OK, I'm going to do some donuts and wave to the fans.' But after I stopped the first time and did that, I calmed down a little bit and I just wanted to make sure I took my time coming back, because I remember at Dover it all happens way too fast. You never know when you're going to get that opportunity again."

Truex blew out his rear tires, tried to wave to every single fan he saw, and took a slow drive around the picturesque road course on his way to Victory Lane, where the MWR crew was waiting to drink from the winner's enormous wine glass.

"I told them on the radio, if they're waiting on me, too bad. I'm taking my time," he said. "You can't explain the feeling. When it's been that long and you worked so hard and you've been so close... when you think at times, 'Man, is this ever going to happen again?' You can't explain the feeling. It's pretty surreal."

Truex worked his way to the front and used strategy to stay with the leaders. He then pulled away after the final restart and built a healthy lead of more than six seconds over Juan Pablo Montoya, who was running second until he ran out of gas on the final lap.

"I'm ecstatic. But I'm not exactly sure how that happened," said Truex, who admitted he wasn't pleased with his car following Friday's practices. "The car was just phenomenal all day long and once I was near the front and didn't have to run the car 110 percent, it just would stay with me on the long runs and I was able to drive away from everyone."

Montoya, who came into the weekend knowing if he didn't win he would at least have a huge points day, dropped all the way to 34th after having to coast to the finish. He took a shortcut to skip the final turn, drifted to the finish line and parked. He then walked back to the garage, annoyed his Chip Ganassi Racing team never told him to save fuel.

"We've got tools to prevent things like that from happening," Montoya said.

"I don't know if all the fuel didn't go," Montoya said. "This is what we've been doing all year. We all work together and we're all trying to do the best we can. Half the reason we're 20-something in points — we're not 20-something in points because we're not running fast. We're 20-something in points because we had a lot of mechanical problems and days like this we throw them away."

Gay completes sprint sweep at U.S. meet

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Mentally, Tyson Gay is now in a good place. Physically, too.

That's the healing power of running fast at nationals.

Once and for all, Gay put to rest any questions about his surgically repaired hip as he completed the 100-200 sprint double Sunday at the U.S. track championships, winning the 200 meters in 19.74 seconds.

It is the fastest time in the world this season. Gay also beat Justin Gatlin in the 100 on Friday in a season-leading time of 9.75.

"I'm pretty tired," Gay said. "I'm just glad I'm leaving the race healthy."

With his strong performance, Gay delivered an emphatic message to the rest of the world, and more specifically Usain Bolt: The Gay of old is back. Not the version hobbled by nagging injuries over the years, but the one who captured the 100 and 200 titles at the 2007 world championships.

"I'm just happy to be healthy," Gay said. "It feels good, man."

It should be quite a show when he meets up with Bolt at worlds in Moscow in August. Not that Gay is thinking any farther than icing down his legs after an exhausting weekend.

"I'm just focused on myself right now," Gay said. "It's no secret Usain Bolt is obviously the greatest of all time. He's definitely going to be prepared."

In the women's 200, Kimberlyn Duncan upset Olympic champion Allyson Felix. Duncan finished in a wind-aided 21.80, with Felix 0.05 seconds behind. Jeneba Tarmoh was third.

Felix said she got a late start on training and hasn't completely found her racing form yet. She skipped the 100 earlier in the week to be more prepared for her signature event, the 200.

"I'm lacking a little bit of speed right now," Felix said. "Overall, my conditioning could be a little better."

Still, Duncan did something in this race that few have done to Felix — made up ground and blazed by her at the finish.

"I didn't know what to do. I was overjoyed," said the 21-year-old Duncan, who won three straight NCAA 200 outdoor titles at LSU. "I'll take that time, windy or not."

It was a busy day to finish nationals, with one final after

Timbers grab a share of first place for first time

PORTLAND (AP) — Frederic Piquionne, Will Johnson and Ryan Johnson scored and the Portland Timbers ran their unbeaten streak to 15 games with a 3-0 victory Sunday over Colorado.

The Timbers are tied with Real Salt Lake for best record in MLS with 30 points, the first time in the team's three-year history it has sat atop the league. Portland (7-1-9), also leads the league in goals with 28. It marks a huge turnaround under first-year coach Caleb Porter for a team which finished 8-16-10 last season.

"It's all about the chemistry we have and the workmanlike attitude," Ryan Johnson said.

Colorado (5-7-5) has lost three straight and has just one win in its last six matches.

The Timbers have shutouts in their last three games and five of seven. The last goals Portland allowed at Jeld-Wen Field in MLS play were in a 2-1 loss to Montreal on March 9.

The Rapids started off aggressively Sunday, getting four shots in the first 11 minutes, but it was Portland that got the early goal, Piquionne scoring on a header off a cross from Rodney Wallace in the 12th minute.

Wallace, returning from spending three games with the Costa Rican national team in World Cup qualifiers, had assists on all three goals. He barely missed a goal of his own in the 22nd minute. He then set up Will Johnson's left-footed blast for the second score just before the half.

"You give energy to a team that knows how to play," Colorado coach Oscar Pareja said. "Going in down 2-0 after the performance we had, it is painful."

Ryan Johnson's goal to seal it in the 84th minute came after Ben Zemanski stole the ball and found Wallace streaking up the sideline. He crossed it in front of the net to Johnson for an easy goal.

"Now, I think it gets even tougher," Will Johnson said. "No more flying under the radar. We're going to get everybody's best now."

Colorado outshot the Timbers 17-6 and kept goalkeeper Donovan Ricketts working throughout the game.

The Timbers have a U.S. Open Cup match against Dallas on Wednesday.

Latos lifts Reds to victory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — Mat Latos matched his career high with 13 strikeouts and the Cincinnati Reds salvaged the finale of their three-game series in Arizona with a 4-2 victory over the Diamondbacks on Sunday.

Shin-Soo Choo hit a leadoff home run and Brandon Phillips added a two-run shot in the first inning off Randall Delgado (0-1).

That was plenty of offense for Latos (7-1), who allowed a run on six hits with one walk in 7 2-3 innings.

Latos, coming off his first loss in 21 starts, didn't strike out anyone in the first two innings, then fanned 13 over the next 5 2-3.

After blowing a save in Cincinnati's 4-3 loss on Saturday, Aroldis Chapman gave up a run in a shaky ninth but still got his 19th save.

The loss snapped Arizona's four-game winning streak.

Braves 7, Brewers 4: Brian McCann hit an early grand slam and Atlanta got solo home runs from Chris Johnson and Jordan Schafer in a victory over Milwaukee.

Beaten 2-0 by the Brewers on Friday and Saturday, the Braves entered the game scoreless in 24 consecutive innings. The streak came to a quick end when McCann smacked a two-out shot to left-center in the first inning off Alfredo Figaro (1-2) for his 10th career slam.

The Braves, who lead the NL East despite getting shut out a major league-high 11 times this season, snapped an eight-game losing streak at Miller Park dating to April 2011.

Dodgers 3, Padres 1: Adrian Gonzalez and Hanley Ramirez hit back-to-back home runs in the ninth inning to lift Los Angeles over San Diego.

Gonzalez, the former Padres star, broke a 1-all tie with a drive to right field off closer Huston Street. Ramirez hit the next pitch to right-center to help the Dodgers split the four-game series. It was the second home run in two days for both players.

Mets 8, Phillies 0: David Wright homered, tripled and matched a Mets record with four extra-base hits to back Matt Harvey's splendid start in a lopsided victory over Philadelphia.

series at first-place Atlanta.

Given a rare heaping of run support, Harvey (7-1) allowed two hits in six innings and struck out six to earn consecutive wins for the first time since mid-April. The 24-year-old righty threw a season-low 72 pitches — his outing was cut short by a 20-minute rain delay in the seventh.

Rockies 7, Nationals 6: Michael Cuddyer homered in his first at-bat to extend the longest hitting streak in the majors this season to 21 games, and Colorado hung on to beat Washington.

Cuddyer went 3-for-4 with four RBIs to break a tie with St. Louis third baseman David Freese for the year's top streak, and the Rockies right fielder is two games shy of matching the franchise's best run.

Marlins 7, Giants 2: Justin Ruggiano hit a leadoff homer to get Miami started and added a two-run shot in the ninth, leading the Marlins to their 10th win in their last 11 games at San Francisco.

Nathan Eovaldi (1-0) held the Giants in check into the seventh inning and Marcell Ozuna hit an RBI double and a solo homer as the Marlins beat Matt Cain (5-4) and a struggling San Francisco bullpen.

INTERLEAGUE

Rangers 2, Cardinals 1: Ian Kinsler

singled in the tiebreaking run in the seventh inning after the Rangers knocked 10-game winner Adam Wainwright out of the game, and Texas completed a soggy, three-game sweep of St. Louis.

The finale of Texas' first visit to Busch Stadium since losing Games 6 and 7 of the 2011 World Series, and first time ever in the regular season, was delayed 2 hours and 59 minutes by heavy rain.

Cubs 14, Astros 6: Ryan Sweeney had a career-high six RBIs, including a three-run homer, as Chicago routed Houston.

Sweeney drove in runs in each of his first four at-bats, capping the stretch with his homer. He also had two doubles and a run-scoring grounder.

Pirates 10, Angels 9, 10 innings: Pedro Alvarez homered for the fourth straight game, Starling Marte capped a three-run ninth inning with a tying single, and the Pirates added four more in the 10th to beat the Angels and complete their first interleague sweep on the road.

Trailing 6-3 entering the ninth, the Pirates pulled even against closer Ernesto Frieri — his second blown save in 19 attempts.

Russell Martin had RBIs in the ninth and 10th for Pittsburgh.

Kevin Jepsen (0-2) was the loser.

Clippers reach deal for Celtics coach

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Doc Rivers will be the next coach of the Los Angeles Clippers if the NBA approves the rare but not unprecedented trade of an active coach, a Boston Celtics official told The Associated Press on Sunday night.

The deal would bring Boston a first-round draft pick in 2015, according to the official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because it is pending a trade call with the NBA office. Rivers, who had three years and $21 million left on his contract with the Celtics, must also reach an agreement on a new deal with the Clippers.

Celtics spokesman Jeff Twiss said the team had no announcement.

The tentative agreement on Sunday wraps up weeks of haggling over the deal and frees Rivers from presiding over the dismantling of the team that won the franchise's record 17th NBA title in 2008.

The Celtics and Clippers have also discussed sending Kevin Garnett to Los Angeles in a package with Rivers for draft choices, center DeAndre Jordan and point guard Eric Bledsoe. But NBA commissioner David Stern nixed those talks this week, saying teams aren't allowed to trade active players for a coach.

Wade played through knee injury in NBA Finals

MIAMI — Dwyane Wade's knee problems were more troublesome during the playoffs than the Miami Heat star ever acknowledged.

Wade revealed Saturday that his right knee pained him so much that he contemplated asking to play limited minutes in Game 7 of the Eastern Conference finals, and that his left knee was drained and required about eight hours of game-day therapy just so he could play in Game 7 of the NBA Finals.

The three-time NBA champion also received platelet-rich plasma therapy late in the regular season to combat three bone bruises around his right knee, which was his biggest source of frustration and pain during the playoffs. Wade said two of the bruises healed, but a third remained a big problem.

Police continue to probe death of semi-pro player

NORTH ATTLEBOROUGH, Mass. — Authorities continue to investigate, but not talk about, the killing of a semi-pro football player whose body was found a mile away from the home of New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez.

A spokeswoman for the Bristol County district attorney's office said Sunday that officials are not releasing details. Officials also are not talking about the cause of death of 27-year-old Odin Lloyd, whose body was found on Monday. His death was ruled a homicide.

Hernandez was questioned and his home searched as part of the police investigation into the Dorchester man's death. Police searched Hernandez's North Attleboro home for three hours Saturday.

Nelson finally receives gold medal for Athens

DES MOINES, Iowa — With one of his young daughters in his arms and the other clinging to his back, American shot putter Adam Nelson finally took his long-awaited victory lap.

Nine years after the Athens Games, Nelson was honored as the 2004 Olympic champion during a ceremony Sunday at the U.S. track and field championships.

Nelson was officially elevated to Olympic champion last month, taking the gold that was stripped from a Ukrainian rival for doping. Nelson finished second in Athens behind Yuriy Bilonog, whose gold medal was removed by the International Olympic Committee in December after his reanalyzed sample tested positive for steroids.

Duke earns first PGA win with birdie in playoff

CROMWELL, Conn. — Journeyman Ken Duke made a 21/2-foot birdie putt on the second playoff hole Sunday to beat Chris Stroud at the Travelers Championship to win his first PGA Tour event.

Stroud had chipped in from 51 feet on the 18th hole to force the playoff.

But the 44-year-old Duke made the better approach shot on the second extra hole, bouncing his ball in front of the flag and rolling it close.

Duke wouldn't have been there at all had luck not intervened on the 10th hole, when his ball ricocheted off a tree and onto the green to about 5 feet from the pin, allowing him to make birdie.

Canadian Graham DeLaet finished a stroke back in third place. Bubba Watson finished fourth, two shots behind, after making a 6 on the par-3 16th hole.

Park captures her fifth LPGA title of season

ROGERS, Ark. — World No. 1 Inbee Park sank a 4-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole against So Yeon Ryu, capping her final-round rally and winning the LPGA NW Arkansas Championship.

The victory is the second straight for Park, who won the LPGA Championship two weeks ago, and the fifth of the year for the South Korean star. She now has seven wins in her last 23 starts.

Els edges Bjorn by one for European Tour win

MUNICH — Ernie Els won the BMW International Open by one shot for his 28th European Tour title. He closed with a third straight 3-under 69 to finish at 18-under 270 on the Eichenried Golf Club course. Els was in front after the first and second rounds and entered the last day as part of a three-way lead.

Thomas Bjorn of Denmark shot a 69 and finished a stroke back. Alexander Levy of France had a 71 and was another stroke off the pace for his best result.

Stadler ends drought of nearly nine years

GLENVIEW, Ill. — Craig Stadler birdied four of the first six holes, then hung on to win the Encompass Championship by one stroke over Fred Couples by sinking a par-saving 12-foot putt on the final hole.

Stadler's eight years and almost nine months between victories is the longest stretch in Champions Tour history. J.C. Snead had gone almost seven years between titles from 1995 to 2002.

Stadler shot 1-under-par 71 at North Shore Country Club to finish at 13-under 203. Couples' final-round 66 put him at 12 under, but he bogeyed the final hole.

Birdie string helps Prugh to share of PGA lead

SUNRIVER — Corey Prugh had six straight birdies and shot an 8-under 63 in light rain Sunday for a share of the first-round lead with Rod Perry in the PGA Professional National Championship.

Prugh, a PGA assistant professional at Manito in Spokane, Wash., and Perry, the PGA head professional at Crane Lakes in Port Orange, Fla., broke the course record on Sunriver Resort's Meadows course.

Jeff Sorenson, a PGA teaching professional at Columbia in Minneapolis, was a stroke back. He also opened at the Meadows.

Three-time champion Mike Small, 2007 winner Chip Sullivan, 2004 champion Bob Sowards and Mark Sheffit had the best scores on the Crosswater Club course, the site of the final rounds, at 3-under 69.

The top 20 finishers will earn spots in the PGA Championship in August at Oak Hill in Rochester, N.Y.

Toronto win streak reaches 11 games

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TORONTO — Edwin Encarnacion homered and drove in four runs, Josh Johnson earned his first win of the season and the Toronto Blue Jays matched a team record by winning their 11th straight game Sunday, finishing a three-game sweep of Baltimore with a 13-5 win.

Toronto also won 11 straight in 1987 and 1998.

Ryan Flaherty hit two homers but Baltimore lost for the fifth time in eight games and allowed a season-high in runs.

Johnson (1-2) was winless in his first seven starts with Toronto, receiving just 13 total runs of support and losing twice.

Mariners 6, Athletics 3, 10 innings: Pinch-hitter Kendrys Morales had a game-ending three-run homer in the 10th inning and Raul Ibanez connected twice for the Mariners in a victory over the Athletics.

Ibanez gave the Mariners the lead with a two-run

Toronto pitcher Dustin McGowan is congratulated by catcher J.P. Arencibia after a 13-5 win over the Baltimore Orioles on Sunday.

homer in the first inning and added a solo shot in the third, his team-leading 17th. It was his second multihomer game this season and 18th of his career.

Royals 7, White Sox 6: The Kansas City Royals took advantage of a pair of errors by the Chicago White Sox to score three times in the eighth inning and rally for a win that avoided a three-game sweep.

The Royals trailed by two when they got consecutive singles by Mike Moustakas and David Lough off ace White Sox reliever Jesse Crain (2-2) to start the eighth. An error by Crain while trying to field a bunt by Elliot Johnson loaded the bases with nobody out.

Crain struck out George Kottaras and Jarrod Dyson to breathe a bit easier, but he walked Alex Gordon to get Kansas City within a run. Alcides Escobar then slapped a grounder to shortstop that Alexei Ramirez let through to left field, bringing in the go-ahead runs.

Tigers 7, Red Sox 5: Torii Hunter hit a tiebreaking sac-meter hurdles.

Rollins, a standout at Clemson before turning pro this month, finished in 12.26 seconds to break the mark of Gail Devers in 2000. It is also the fastest time in a 100 hurdles race in 21 years.

Not to be outdone, 17-year-old Mary Cain finished second in the 1,500 meters to earn a spot at the world championships in Moscow in August. She took second when she was edged at the line by training partner Treniere Moser.

Cain is the first high-schooler to make the world team since Felix nearly a decade ago. Cain could hardly contain her enthusiasm after a nearly flawless race.

This after being petrified at the prospect of running against an elite field with so much at stake.

"I called my mom the other day crying and was like, 'I'm just a little kid. I'm so scared,'" Cain said, holding a stuffed yellow duck for comfort. "She's like, 'Mary I know you. If I could take you away right now, I would. But you would be kicking yourself for the rest of your life if you weren't in that final.' I let the nerves take over me for a minute. Then, I pushed them out."

"Getting to wear a Team USA uniform is amazing. I really wanted to get a uniform."

LaShawn Merritt captured the 400 crown, and Olympic champion Ashton Eaton took the decathlon title.

"It was an OK two days," Eaton said. "It's very difficult to compete in the heat."

Yet in the heat, there were three American records. Michelle Carter set a mark in the shot put with a throw of 66 feet, 5 inches on her way to the title.

Later, Amanda Bingson broke the U.S. mark in the hammer throw with her toss of 248-5.

Other winners included Nicole Bush (3,000 steeplechase), Brigetta Barrett (high jump), Janay DeLoach Soukup (long jump), Matthew Centrowitz (1,500), Maria Michta (20,000 race walk), Michael Tinsley (400 hurdles) and Natasha Hastings (400).

Chicago can clinch title today

BOSTON (AP) — Jonathan Toews watched the end of the fifth game of the Stanley Cup Final from the Blackhawks bench, unable to play after a hit to his head.

Bruins forward Patrice Bergeron was in a Chicago hospital after leaving the United Center by ambulance. As the Stanley Cup Final approaches a sixth and potential clinching game tonight, the attention shifted from the players on the ice to the ones who might not make it there, including two of the top forwards and biggest stars in the series.

“It’s not the best situation for either team,” Bruins goalie Tuukka Rask said Sunday after both teams flew back to Boston. “But it’s a tough sport, and injuries happen. When you leave it all out there to help your team win, that’s all part of the game.”

Bergeron was injured in the second period of Game 5 on Saturday night, which the Blackhawks won 3-1 to take a 3-2 lead in the series. He made two brief appearances on the ice in the third period but something was obviously wrong and he was unable to complete either shift.

Toews, who won the Selke Award as the NHL’s top defensive forward — Bergeron was a finalist — missed the entire third period after a shot to the head from Bruins defenseman Johnny Boychuk.

“They’re both great players,” Chicago winger Patrick Sharp said. “I think any coach in the league, any player in the league would like to have those guys on their team. They take pride in taking faceoffs, playing well away from the puck, making their linemates better, (they’re) both big parts of the locker room.

“I can’t speak for what Boston is dealing with, with Bergeron. I know I don’t need to say much about Jonathan. I think everyone knows what we think of him in our locker room. Hopefully we can have him back for (Monday).”

Bergeron, who was taken to the hospital for observation, was released later Saturday night and rejoined his teammates for a team meal.

Bergeron was on the team flight back from Chicago. After the Bruins’ bus arrived at the TD Garden in the afternoon, he walked without crutches or assistance to a car and was driven away.

The Blackhawks lost Toews after Boychuk knocked him down in the slot, making contact with his head. Boychuk wasn’t penalized, and NHL spokesman John Dellapina said on Sunday that the league reviewed the hit and there will be no supplemental discipline.

Crew chief Chris Heroy was perplexed about the shortage.

“We don’t know what happened — we were on the same strategy as (Truex),” Heroy said through a team spokeswoman. “We’re going to go back to the shop and figure it out.”

Montoya got little sympathy from Kyle Busch, who was spun by Montoya early in the race when Montoya drove too deep into a corner and wheel-hopped over a curb.

“Awww. My heart melts for @jpmontoya who ran out of gas,” Busch tweeted moments after the race.

Jeff Gordon finished second a week after he was wrecked six laps into the race at Michigan, but felt like he might have had a chance to win if he had not already committed to pit seconds before a caution came out early in the race.

“I mean, I really do think we had a shot winning this race. We had a tremendous car,” Gordon said. “I knew we were screwed. There was nothing I could do; I was hard on the brakes, fully committed. I couldn’t turn away from it, I just knew we had to eat it and go on, and that’s what we did.”

Carl Edwards was third, followed by Kurt Busch, who climbed back from a pair of pit row speeding penalties.

Hinchcliffe continues Andretti domination

NEWTON, Iowa (AP) — Andretti Autosport has long been the team to beat at Iowa Speedway.

On Sunday, James Hinchcliffe put an exclamation point on Andretti's dominance there with the best race of his career.

Hinchcliffe cruised to victory in the IndyCar Series race, leading all but 24 of 250 laps. He became the first three-time winner this season and gave Andretti Autosport its fourth consecutive victory at Iowa's .875-mile oval, the shortest track on the circuit.

Ryan Hunter-Reay, Hinchcliffe's teammate, battled back from last place to finish second. He was followed by Tony Kanaan, Ed Carpenter and Graham Rahal.

Hinchcliffe took the lead on the opening lap and ceded control only briefly during pit stops. He joined Kanaan, Marco Andretti and Hunter-Reay as Iowa winners for Andretti Autosport since 2010.

But none of those runs was as dominant as the one Hinchcliffe put together this time around.

"I've watched guys win races like this on TV, and my whole career I thought 'I just don't get it. How do they do that?' I've never been in that position. And now I know. You have to have a hell of a good car. You have to have a hell of a good crew and just hit your marks all afternoon long," Hinchcliffe said. "Man, it feels good to do it like that."

Now the next step for Hinchcliffe is consistency.

Despite earning his first three career wins this season, Hinchcliffe is 66

James Hinchcliffe leads Charlie Kimball, James Jakes and Marco Andretti as he comes into Turn 3 at the Iowa Speedway on Sunday.

points behind series leader Helio Castroneves because of five finishes of 15th or lower.

"He's been either feast or famine. He either wins or he has problems. But he knows he's capable of winning," team owner Michael Andretti. "If he can hopefully get through all his problems and continue to do what he's doing, he has a good shot at a championship."

Series leader Helio Castroneves was eighth. His lead over Hunter-Reay was cut to nine points — the exact number Castroneves earned Saturday by winning the pole through heat qualifying races.

"We drove as hard as we could. When they told me I came in eighth, I was like 'What?' I certainly felt we had a better car than that," Castroneves said.

It was clear from the opening lap that nobody had a better car than the No. 27 of Hinchcliffe.

He immediately grabbed control of the race from Will Power, who counts just one oval among his 18 series victories. Power fell behind by as much as a lap midway through the race and finished 17th.

Hinchcliffe also held off a furious challenge from Rahal off a restart about 90 laps from the finish. Though Rahal technically took the lead for a lap, Hinchcliffe hung on to the low groove, running side-by-side with Rahal, before bursting clear.

Hinchcliffe had only led 99 laps in his three-year IndyCar career before Sunday. He surpassed that total less than halfway through the race.

"We got (Power) on lap one there and really never looked back. The car was solid," Hinchcliffe said. "When we needed it, the car was awesome. We were fast up front by ourselves. We were good in traffic."

Hunter-Reay fell behind Castroneves by 25 points on Saturday after a poor showing during the qualifying heats. It only got worse for Hunter-Reay roughly 40 laps in when he rear-ended Rahal, forcing his team to change out his front wing. But he scrambled from the back for an impressive podium finish.

"It was a really good day for points, to finish second after being dead last, and just (Saturday) we had the nightmare of a day," Hunter-Reay said. "It's a bummer when you have that good of a car to finish second. But considering we came from the back of the pack to finish second in such a tight field, I have to be happy about that. Somewhat pleased, I should say."

Force beats her dad for Funny Car title

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EPPING, N.H. — Courtney Force claimed a Funny Car victory against her father on Sunday at the Auto-Plus NHRA New England Nationals.

In their first final round matchup, Courtney Force earned her second victory of the year and third in her career. She improved to 4-2 against her father, John Force, a 15-time Funny Car world champion.

It was their first meeting in the finals.

Courtney, who lost to John in the first round at Bristol Dragway last weekend, outran Alexis DeJoria, Tim Wilkerson and defending Funny Car world champion Jack Beckman to reach the final round.

She then powered her Ford Mustang to a winning performance of 4.301 seconds at 261.67 mph, edging her father's Mustang, which trailed with a 4.367 at 193.93.

Spencer Massey (Top Fuel), Allen Johnson (Pro Stock) and John Hall (Pro Stock Motorcycle) also were winners at the NHRA Mello Yello Drag Racing Series event, the 11th of 24 this season.

Allmendinger gets win

ELKHART LAKE, Wis. — AJ Allmendinger slid past Justin Allgaier with seven laps to go, then defended his lead through a late restart and a pair of nerve-testing green-white-checked overtime finishes to win Saturday's NASCAR Nationwide Series race at Road America.

For Allmendinger, it was another step toward rebuilding his racing career after sitting out part of last season because of a violation of NASCAR's substance-abuse policy. It also was a return to victory lane at Road America for Allmendinger, who won at the four-mile road course in Central Wisconsin in the Champ Car Series in 2006.

Allgaier finished second, followed by Parker Kligerman, Owen Kelly and Sam Hornish Jr.

Driver dies at Le Mans

LE MANS, France — Audi has won the 24 Hours of Le Mans for the fourth straight year in an endurance race overshadowed by the death of Danish driver Allan Simonsen at the start.

Simonsen was the first driver fatality at Le Mans since 1997.

Tom Kristensen, Allan McNish and Loic Duval steered Audi No. 2 to victory on Sunday, one lap ahead of Toyota No. 8 driven by Anthony Davidson, Sebastien Buemi and Stephane Sarrazin.

It was Duval's first victory at the world's most famous endurance race, but the third for Kristensen, who extended his record for most titles by a driver.

Audi earned its 12th title at Le Mans, four shy of Porsche's record.
