Arizona offense vs. Stanford defense

Stanford plays a man-to-man defense, with some zone mixed in, that ranks across the board in the middle of Pac-10 standings during conference games, despite its lack of size. The Cardinal won its first two road games of the season last weekend in Oregon, thanks in large part because of defense: Stanford held both the Ducks and Cougars to 40.7 percent shooting from the field and under 30 percent from three-point range.

LANDRY FIELDS

The Pac-10 Player of the Year candidate is not only a menace offensively, scoring all over the floor while averaging 21.2 points in conference games, but he also leads the Cardinal in steals with 45.

DERRICK WILLIAMS

Stanford's interior defense had trouble dealing with Williams last month at McKale, when the freshman center had 23 points and eight rebounds.

HE SAID IT ...

“They’re playing well. They have two great scorers (Landry Fields and Jeremy Green). Landry Fields is one of the great seniors in college basketball. They did a really good job the first game (against UA), where they mixed in some zone and man, and they have a physicalness to them.”

Sean Miller, Arizona coach
