Beef Summit to highlight timely production, industry challenges

By Kacie McCarthy
University of Nebraska-Lincoln

Beef producers, agricultural professionals, students and industry partners are invited to attend the 2026 Nebraska Beef Summit Dec. 9 at the Younes Convention Center in Kearney.

This year's summit will be held in conjunction with the Nebraska Cattlemen Convention and Trade Show, bringing together producers, researchers and industry leaders to discuss challenges and opportunities facing the beef industry.

Organized by University of Nebraska–Lincoln students, the summit will feature university specialists, veterinarians, economists and industry representatives addressing topics across the beef supply chain, including herd rebuilding, heifer-retention economics, cattle health, carcass value and international beef demand.

Two featured afternoon presentations will examine trends influencing the beef industry's future. Ty Lawrence, professor of animal science and director of the Beef Carcass Research Center at West Texas A&M University, will present "Where Does the Growth Stop? Strategic Insights into the Trend of Continually Heavier Finishing Weights." Dan Halstrom, president and CEO of the U.S. Meat Export Federation, will discuss "Why Exports Are Critical for the U.S. Beef Supply Chain."

With producers evaluating opportunities for herd expansion, the summit will also address heifer development and retention decisions. Shelby Rosasco, assistant professor and Extension beef specialist at the University of Wyoming, will present "Positioned for Expansion: Heifer Development Strategies for Improved Retention." Tyler W. Cozzens of the Livestock Marketing Information Center will follow with an economic and market outlook for heifer retention.

Additional sessions will explore autonomous feed trucks, heart failure risk in beef cattle, mineral programs, Beef Quality Assurance, generational transition planning, bovine theileriosis and the Asian longhorned tick.

Registration and networking will begin at 8 a.m., with presentations starting at 8:15 a.m. The summit is scheduled to conclude at approximately 5:15 p.m.

Registration is coordinated through Nebraska Cattlemen. The complete agenda, registration information and sponsorship opportunities are available at go.unl.edu/beefsummit.

For more information, contact Kacie McCarthy at 402-472-6074 or kacie.mccarthy@unl.edu.

A Sandhills Ranch Internship program participant moves cattle.

Seeking summer ranch interns

The Sandhills Task Force is accepting applications for the its fifth season of the Sandhills Ranch Internship program, and the organization is bringing back the apprenticeship program for its second season.

The Sandhills Task Force partners with several skilled ranchers in the Nebraska Sandhills to offer this opportunity. These ranch programs provide a unique chance to gain hands-on experience, develop valuable skills, and build meaningful relationships. Candidates should be passionate about agriculture, have a strong interest in ranching, cattle production, and land management, and be eager to learn.

The ranch internship is a paid, three-month, summer-long position. The ranch apprenticeship is a nine-month paid position running from March through November. All positions include housing, partial board and additional paid-for educational opportunities.

The deadline to apply is Jan. 5, 2027.

To learn more and to apply, visit www.sandhillstaskforce.org or contact KyLee at kylee@sandhillstaskforce.org or 308-340-2781.

Kansas Livestock convention to offer timely insights

The decisions livestock producers make today can have lasting effects on their operations, from how they respond to rural development pressures to how they meet changing consumer expectations and manage market uncertainty.

The 2026 Kansas Livestock Association (KLA) Convention and Expo will offer timely information and expert perspectives on these issues and more for ranchers, cattle feeders, dairy farmers and other industry stakeholders planning to be at the Hilton Garden Inn and Convention Center in Manhattan Nov. 18-20.

The event will start Wednesday afternoon with the new KLA Branding Party, a fundraiser for the Kansas Livestock Foundation (KLF) Scholarship Program. For a $250 donation, members can burn their brand into a wooden plank that will be displayed in the KLA office in Topeka. All proceeds will benefit youth in agriculture through KLF's scholarship fund. The come-and-go party will run from 2-6 p.m.

Later that evening, convention attendees can enjoy the Cattlemen's Banquet. Longtime KLA members will be honored, scholarship recipients recognized, and a live auction will be held to benefit the KLA Political Action Committee, KLF and Ranchland Trust of Kansas.

Tim the Dairy Farmer, a Florida dairyman and stand-up comedian known for his humor about agriculture and rural life, will round out the evening. He performs at agricultural events, comedy clubs and festivals across North America and can be heard on SiriusXM.

Thursday morning's Beef Industry University will focus on data center development and its implications for rural communities. Speakers Robin Roberts and Autumn Lankford Higgins will discuss the factors driving data center expansion and considerations for livestock producers when projects are proposed in their communities, including utility usage, zoning regulations and noise levels.

Roberts grew up in rural Kansas and owns Central Power Systems & Services, which he acquired in 2015. Higgins joined the American Farm Bureau Federation in 2025 as director of government affairs, focusing on agricultural policy issues involving technology and rural development.

The Kansas Beef Council's (KBC) Consumer Trends Forum will take place Thursday afternoon. KBC staff members Scott Stebner, Abby Heidari and Hailey Gilbreath will examine how social media, health professionals and educators influence consumer perceptions of beef, nutrition and cooking. They also will discuss how KBC uses marketing and educational programs to build demand for beef.

The convention will conclude Friday with the membership breakfast. CattleFax Chief Executive Officer Randy Blach will provide a cattle market outlook addressing historically high cattle prices, tight supplies and ongoing market uncertainty.

A complete schedule, hotel information, and both online and printable registration forms are available at www.kla.org under Events & Meetings. Those preferring to register by phone can call KLA at 785-273-5115. All livestock producers and industry stakeholders are welcome to attend the convention and expo.

Ranch Legacy workshop in Chadron set for Dec. 8

As Nebraska agriculture faces one of the largest generational transfers of land and assets in history, the importance of proactive succession planning continues to grow.

The Nebraska Grazing Lands Coalition (NGLC) is hosting a Farm and Ranch Legacy Workshop Dec. 8 in Chadron, an educational event to help producers navigate the transition of agricultural operations to the next generation.

Experts estimate that nearly 70% of U.S. farmland and ranchland will change hands within the next 20 years, underscoring the need for families to begin conversations early and plan intentionally.

"The future of Nebraska's grazing lands depends on the families who care for them," said Angela Redman, assistant director of the Nebraska Grazing Lands Coalition. "This workshop provides producers with the knowledge and resources to start important conversations and take meaningful steps toward securing their family's legacy."

The workshop is open to producers at any stage of the planning process and will provide information on transition tools that can help families protect their operations, preserve relationships and plan for the future.

To begin the day, NGLC will host a Coffee Hour from 9-10 a.m., where producers can visit with local, state, and federal agencies that offer programs and services supporting Nebraska's agricultural operations. Coffee and a light breakfast will be served, giving attendees an opportunity to connect, ask questions and learn about resources available to them before the workshop begins.

During the workshop, participants will hear from ag attorney Pamela Epp Olsen on the mechanics of estate and generational transition planning. A producer panel will also share firsthand experiences, lessons learned, and approaches that helped, or hindered their own transition planning efforts.

NGLC offers scholarships for producers to attend the Farm & Ranch Legacy Workshop. Additional scholarships are available to help offset costs associated with legacy planning.

For more information about the Chadron workshop, scholarship opportunities, or registration, visit www.nebraskagrazinglands.org

Grazing downed corn

By Ben Beckman, Nebraska Extension

With corn harvest wrapping up, some fields have more grain left behind than normal. Stalk rots, wind damage, and lodging can leave dropped ears or missed corn that cattle will find quickly. Too much grain at once, though, can cause acidosis, or grain overload.

Before turnout, estimate what's out there. In fields with 30-inch rows, count dropped ears in three separate 100-foot row lengths, add them together, and divide by two to get bushels per acre. Thirty ears would mean roughly fifteen bushels per acre. Repeat this in several locations, and watch for shelled grain and lodged ears cattle can reach, since the ear count may miss those.

Once you're above eight to ten bushels per acre, additional precautions are needed. Cattle familiar with cornstalk grazing often seek out grain first, so getting them adapted before turnout is important. Start with two to three pounds of corn per head daily, increasing gradually to ten to twelve pounds over seven to ten days. Turn cattle out full, with good quality hay or other roughage available. From there, use temporary fence to control access to downed grain rather than turning cattle into the entire field. At fifteen bushels per acre, for example, limiting 100 cows to about 1.2 acres per day would provide access to roughly ten pounds of corn per cow.

The coffee shop is also mobile. "The Garden on Wheels" travels to the Burwell Rodeo, Merna Heritage Day, Broken Bow's farmers market, town celebrations and county fairs, as well as 16 years at Grand Island as a Nebraska State Fair vendor.

Most of the year, the on-farm storefront and diner is open only on Fridays and Saturdays. It opens daily the entire month of May because of the greenhouse, said Safranek.

With the holidays fast approaching, The Secret Garden is gearing up for extended seasonal hours. Holiday shoppers are invited to come any day of the week from Black Friday (the day after Thanksgiving) through Christmas Eve.

In addition, 85-90% of the in-store inventory can also be purchased online. Safranek mentioned that many gift items and cards are Christian based, saying, "It's my way of spreading God's word."

While perusing for the perfect gift at The Secret Garden, don't forget to treat yourself with a steaming cup of cocoa or freshly baked cranberry scone.

"You can have a frappe, hot latte, smoothie or food any time I'm open," Safranek said.
