From the Editor

Puttin' on The Ritz

It's hard to spend any time at all in the vicinity of Talladega without getting to know George Culver, at least by reputation.

And the executive director of The Historic Ritz Theatre is a soul worth knowing.

An alumnus of the University of Alabama and the University of Pennsylvania, George is a graduate of Leadership Alabama and served six years as a member of the board of League of Historic American Theatres, where he co-chaired three national conferences. He has studied Shakespeare at Oxford (England, not Alabama), served as an intern at the U.S. Senate and worked at Showtime and The Actor's Studio while living in Manhattan, where he produced a PBS documentary and an off-Broadway play.

But no matter where his career took him, he's never forgotten his local roots.

"I grew up in Munford," he recalls. "Talladega, however, was my family's downtown where we shopped at Belk-Hudsons or Goldberg & Lewis department stores, saw Dr. Salter or Dr. Campbell for medical needs and Dr. Clark for dental care, patronized Wright's Drugstore or Dan Blake's Professional Apothecary for prescriptions, and occasionally caught a movie at The Martin."

After spending 14 years in New York, he admirably returned to his old haunts to care for family obligations, and local communities have benefited from the opportunity it afforded him to take the helm at The Ritz.

"The success and longevity of The Ritz is an important source of pride for me," he said. "I'm blessed to have an astute board to collaborate with and have their tireless support in good times and bad. There were many folks at the beginning who did not believe the public-private partnership between the city and our nonprofit board would work or survive. But it has, and The Ritz has proved itself over 20 years to be an indispensable asset for our community."

George should be proud of that. Because of him, the lakeside area has had access to cultural and entertainment opportunities it might otherwise have never seen. But it's characteristic of him that he declines to take the credit. "Lots of people have contributed their time to make our accomplishments happen, for which I am especially grateful. The Ritz can realize far more over its next 20 years, but it will not survive without persistent and prideful community support."

An excellent opportunity to support The Ritz is by attending the shows scheduled during the theatre's fall-winter season, which begins this month with an evening of family-friendly stand-up comedy with James Gregory. In January, the perennial favorite Black Jacket Symphony returns to Talladega to perform Queen's A Night at the Opera, and the season concludes with three performances of Menopause The Musical.

This issue of Lakeside Living features a conversation with Gregory about his return to The Ritz, as well as a visit to the shoreline home of Bob and Brenda Shaw and a preview of an upcoming Native American festival hosted by lakeside communities. Also, find out how a journey along the Alabama Scenic River Trail led a pair of kayakers to a night of camping in the middle of Logan Martin.

As always, thank you for joining us. And be sure to join George at The Ritz for this season's shows.

CALENDAR KEY

Fishing Condition: This is the overall rating for the whole day, based upon our formula:

Best ■ Good ■ Fair ■ Poor ■

Best Time: This column lists the best time of the day when, according to our formula, fish will be biting: MORNING; EVENING.

Reeling in bass during November

Shorter days, cooler temperatures and buck fever go a long ways toward calming many an avid angler's desire to put the boat in the water and go bass fishing come November. But autumn (especially mid-November to mid-December) can be one of the best times of the year to do so.

The more the mercury dips, the tighter the schools of baitfish will be. And when baitfish schools get tight, bass feed like crazy, gorging themselves for winter. Cold-weather bass fishing is usually a numbers game: where you find one, there's bound to be more.

On warm sunny days, anglers can often find fish relatively shallow. Fish will often gather on the first structure element (the edge of a weed line or a rock pile) offshore, and they can be taken on all manner of motion lures, such as crankbaits. Vibrating, rattling baits like a crankbait are productive when water temperatures are falling. Look for wooden docks, on which algae grows below the water line. Bass can easily lay in the shadows of the dock pilings and feed on minnows, shad and other prey as they attempt to feed off the algae.

Lakeside communities host gathering to celebrate Native American Heritage

Written by Sherry Kughn
File and submitted photos

Many northeast Alabama residents who have Native American heritage will descend to a local farm for rescue animals in the Alpine-Winterboro area on Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 17-18.

The public is invited to the Blind Horse Intertribal Pow Wow festivities each day to begin at 10 a.m. and end at 5 p.m. Featured will be drumming, singing, dancing, flute music, flint knapping, basket weaving and many other skills, along with food vendors, that honor Native American life. EarthQuest Birds of Prey will also be on display.

This annual fall event, sponsored by George "Running with the Wind" Weisbrod, is one of two festivals held each year, the other being in the spring.

Weisbrod, who owns the property where the bi-annual events are held, will welcome the teepees tents that spring up like mushrooms, and the brightly colored feathers and leather fringe that swirl as drums and feet beat to the strong rhythms of Native American music.

Weisbrod has hosted the pow wows since 2015. He is enthusiastic about the many friends he has made since then. The scant entrance fees for the November powwow are $10 per family, $5 for single adults, and $2 for several special groups of visitors, such as senior citizens, first responders, military veterans and those who work in emergency rooms. The income helps defray the cost of caring for the handful of rescue horses and dogs that Weisbrod takes in each year on the land that he has named the Tract Farm Stable and Kennel. He is a retired federal dog handler.

"Also, we pay an announcer at the event and pay for those who play the drums," he said.

Weisbrod is a slight, wiry man whose blue eyes beam with excitement as he tells his story of discovering his Native American heritage. He was born in Montana and, as a two-year-old, taken to a reservation in North Dakota. A German family from New Jersey adopted him at age five. Subtle memories from his past led him to research his origin, and when he learned, through DNA testing, that he was 81% Native American, he embraced the spiritual aspects of his heritage and began bonding with many other Native Americans from northeast Alabama, especially when he bought his current property in 1987. He and his friends meet frequently and help with a variety of efforts, such as raising funds for the animals and for charitable efforts that help Native Americans in remote areas of the Dakotas and in other states.

Cora "Seven Hawks" Parker devotes her time to conducting mission trips to reservations.

church's efforts to give food to Native Americans in Oklahoma.

Others who sat at a table beneath an evergreen tree on a recent Saturday added to the discussion about the plight of Native Americans. They were Gary "Thunder Wolf" Soyars, Larry "Wisdom Bear" Mindler, Penny "Red Feather" Parker and Luther Lackey, who has yet to receive his Native American name. (When Soyars gets to know Lackey's personality, he, being an elder in his Native American tribe, will choose a name that suits him.)

Many of these friends intertwine aspects of their heritage into their daily lives.

Those who join these friends at the upcoming pow wow may find new beginnings, too, but all will certainly learn more about Native Americans.

D on a cool, sunny Saturday morning last month, I sat in a clearing with property owner George Weisbrod and five of his friends who are of Native American descent.

I was happy to get an assignment to interview Weisbrod about the upcoming Blind Horse Intertribal Pow Wow because I have been told, like many others who are from northeast Alabama, that I have a great-great-grandparent who was a full-blooded Native American. Like most of us, these friends are from tribes both inside and outside of the Alabama's Creeks and Cherokees. One of them is a member of the Apache tribe and one is a Blackfoot.

We spent an hour or so discussing their daily lifestyles and religious beliefs, which are based on Native American traditions. Afterward, I expressed interest in walking into a nearby forest where, according to these friends, there are graves containing the remains of Native Americans and more. Weisbrod, who said he had a map of the cemetery, said there is at least one horse buried there and several African American residents of the area.

"The cemetery is sacred ground," one of the friends said. "We will cleanse those who want to enter."

Luther Lackey retrieved a large oyster shell, filled it with white-sage leaves and lit them. He waved his hand over them several times to make sure they stayed lit. Smoke began rising from the shell.

Gary "Thunder Wolf" Soyars, took two bird feathers that he had been wearing in his baseball cap and gave them to Lackey, who began fanning the leaves with the feathers, creating more smoke.

Cora Parker, another of Weisbrod's friends, told me to stand with my arms outstretched. Lackey faced me and began waving the smoke from the shell above my head and all around me, even asking me to lift my feet as he waved smoke beneath each one. He walked behind me and waved more smoke, although he did not ask me to lift my feet again.

Then Lackey waved the smoke around the others. When he finished, we walked into the nearby forest. I heard Soyars, who had stayed behind, begin singing in a Native American tongue and he continued for several minutes. I suppose he was singing to Mother Earth or the Great Spirit, both of which I had, only minutes before, discussed with group.

As we walked up a small hill, Weisbrod pointed out the rises and dips of what he said were graves. A few yards later, we came upon several rectangular gravestones. One had writing on it, revealing the burial place of a woman named Channie Miller who died in 1924. Weisbrod said that she was African American and the last person to be buried in the cemetery.

As we topped the hill and began descending, Weisbrod pointed out to me a few other features of his land and he told me that, during the pow wow, the cemetery would be off limits.

"Once I had to ask a scout group who was visiting to leave the sacred grounds," he said.

This group of friends is serious about its practices.

When I returned home, I researched the cleansing ceremony, which is called "smudging" among Native Americans. Its purpose is to remove negative energy from each person's silent energy and to cleanse the environment. It can be done with any type of bowl, but some tribes prefer an oyster bowl because it is from nature. Various tribes prefer different types of leaves, such as tobacco, sage, cedar, sweet grass, juniper, lavender or others.

Some tribes use the hand to wave the smoke; but others prefer bird feathers because, like many of the items they prize, birds are important symbols. They reach heights in the sky, close to the Creator, and they reach lows where they light, close to Mother Earth.

EarthQuest demonstration encourages conservation of birds often seen in lakeside skies

Written by Shirley Kughn

In the days of kings, birds of prey were used by their owners as a method for hunting animals for food.

Trained condors, vultures, hawks, falcons, and owls will take spectators back to such a time when they show off their amazing feats at the Blind Horse Intertribal Pow Wow. Trainers Steve Hoddy and Don McCullough will conduct a morning and afternoon show each day of the event in an effort to teach the public how important it is to protect the environment.

The two trainers operate EarthQuest, an educational program based in Pine Mountain Valley, Georgia. Usually, they present their shows to children in schools throughout the nation, but they also show birds at festivals and other events where people are interested in birds, nature, and the environment. Hoddy is an expert in falconry, the sport in which trained raptors hunt game.

"Each show is different," said Hoddy, a master falconer. "We have a wide variety of birds of prey."

The two teach others how raptors are one of the keystone species at the top of the food chain. If the birds are threatened with extinction, all other animals are threatened.

Trainer Steve Hoddy exhibits owls and other birds of prey (characterized by hooked beaks, excellent eyesight, strong legs and sharp talons) to thousands of interested spectators every year.

Hoddy showed slides to groups. However, he has learned throughout the years that people are more interested in the lessons he teaches them when they see how beautiful a hawk is or they see a falcon flying overhead at about 100 miles per hour.

Hoddy has gained fame for finding what was believed to be the last wild California condor eyrie, which is a nest for birds of prey. He appeared on The Tonight Show in 1973 and served as educational director in Silver Springs, Florida. He has trained a wide variety of animals, but birds of prey are his focus. He has worked as a cameraman at Sea World and studied the peregrine falcons by living alone in the wilderness for months at a time. He has trained animals in television commercials for Miller Malt Liquor and the Buick Skyhawk. He trained the European Steppe Eagle that is featured at the opening of NBA games for Turner Broadcasting, and he cares for the Aflac ducks that appear at special events. He is the star of a motion picture called "Their Only Chance" about a young character's love for wild animals.

Specific times for the shows will be available at the event.

Testing the waters with the Coosa Riverkeepers

Written by John Dowd
Photographed Tucker Webb

For eight years, Frank Chitwood of Alabama's Coosa Riverkeepers has been working to keep local rivers, lakes and streams healthy.

He started the branch, one of 250 waterkeepers throughout the country and one of eight in Alabama, in 2010 to preserve the Coosa River. At the time, it was listed as one of the top 10 most endangered rivers in America, at risk from the influence of hydropower.

Chitwood graduated from Boston University with a degree in accounting, but his heart lead him to water conservation. He also minored in environmental analysis and has since used that far more than his accounting skills.

Logan Martin Lake is one of several that Coosa Riverkeepers tests and works to conserve. Lately Logan Martin has been having E. coli problems, due to some unknown factor. One of Franks jobs is to test the water to find the cause.

"There are many factors," Frank says, "it could be geese, pet waste from the parks, livestock, or even Keeping your power on requires a lot of different tools. At Coosa Valley Electric Cooperative, we employ the latest technology to do more than just build power lines. Hi-tech machines, such as the Jarraf side-tree trimmer, help us quickly clear trees and tree limbs from our rights of way to keep your service reliable. human waste from local sewage companies." The organization helps to warn communities where these risks are higher, and lobbies to place signs warning swimmers and fisherman where the highest risk locations are.

On its website, www.coosariver.org, Coosa Riverkeepers offers a fishing guide to ramps and marinas, as well as fish spawning information and fish consumption advisories. "If more people knew about the advisories, I am sure they would follow them, but people just don't know. That's what we work for every day," Chitwood said. Lake goers can stay up-to-date on new text message alerts by texting "SWIMGUIDE" to 844-83 and signing up.

The organization is a non-profit, citizen-based group dedicated to the conservation of the Coosa River and its tributaries. This means that it receives no public funds and is built on the principle of "doing what the government is supposed to," as Chitwood puts it.

All money funneled into the Coosa Riverkeepers comes from individual supporters, private and corporate donations and fundraisers. It has a full-time staff of three people and hundreds of members, as well help from a constant flow of interns. At its headquarters is a state-of-the-art testing laboratory for testing water bacteria levels, turbidity, oxygen and much more from water samples collected throughout various locations along the waterways it monitors.

One of the main goals of the Coosa Riverkeeper is to educate locals on the importance of conservation and to push for conservative action. One example Chitwood gave was of a legal case, several years ago, with sewer plants that release a certain percentage of runoff into the lakes. This percentage increases in the "off-season" of the "recreation season" during which it is assumed that less people will be swimming. The work from Coosa River Keepers fought to extend the duration

Long-distance kayakers find refuge on School Bus Island

Written by Laura Gaddy

A storm was approaching and a strong headwind was pushing against Will Denton as he paddled a long, narrow kayak toward School Bus Island on a recent afternoon. Denton, a Lake Martin resident, had never heard of the island but sought a campsite there at the recommendation of a stranger. When he arrived, Denton headed straight for a hammock set on the island, slid a cigar between his lips and sprawled out. "I was exhausted after we got there after fighting that headwind," Denton said. Denton, 79, and his cousin John Denton, 66, of Mississippi, were on a 650-mile aquatic journey on the Alabama Scenic River Trail (ASRT). Their trip began on Sept. 1 at the Georgia state line in Northeast Alabama. It ended on Oct. 7 at Fort Morgan.

The Alabama Scenic River Trail includes more than 5,000 river trail miles across Alabama. The stretch the Dentons used for their journey, including Lake Logan Martin, is part of the core section of the trail.

"It wasn't that hard to do," Denton said of the trip. "It got to where it was like walking."

The Dentons relied on riverfront campgrounds established by the ASRT, a few hotels and some local spots like School Bus Island for overnight accommodations. Denton said that while some campgrounds provided more accommodations – bathrooms and electricity – none offered as much flair as School Bus Island.

"It turned out to be the neatest, I think, place we camped on the whole trip," Denton said.

He said he appreciated the care local lake goers had taken to make it feel unique. In particular, he said, he liked the touches added by colorful signs, a skull and crossbones flag and the hammock.

There are more than 200 ASRT campsites on the river trail. Most are marked by bright blue signs with white ASRT lettering. Several can be found on the scenic river trail's website.

ASRT campsites are riverfront campgrounds, which can be accessed by water. They can be found on public land, and on private property.

Many ASRT campgrounds are uniquely positioned so as to be accessible exclusively by water. They also offer a range of accommodations, with some offering only primitive accommodations and others providing convenience, including water and electricity.

Prior to the long distance paddle on the ASRT,

Denton had paddled for about four decades.

His cousin, John, had hiked long distances on the Appalachian Trail.

He said their previous experience in the outdoors prepared them for the ASRT, and that the ASRT will prepare them to keep adventuring, adding that he is in better shape now than he was before he completed the trip.

"After a week or ten days, we kind of found a rhythm that was comfortable for both of us," he said.

‘It is a simple little house,
but we love it’

Written by Buddy Roberts
Photographed by Tucker Webb

Ask Brenda Shaw to describe her lake home, and she'll speak modestly about the house that was built a year before Logan Martin was created.

"It is not grand at all," she said. "It is a simple little house, but we love it. It is the perfect lake house for us."

She and her husband met when both were working at Fort McPherson in Atlanta, and they purchased their lake home in 1987. Since then – especially now that they're retired and residing in Anniston – they've enjoyed using the property as a weekend getaway.

"We're here as often as we can be," Brenda said. "This summer, we spent a lot of time there."

Having owned the house for more than 30 years, she's sometimes amazed at how its appearance and structure have changed.

"It was built in 1964 as a little concrete block house. We have done a lot of work on it, and it no longer looks like a concrete block house. When we first bought it, it was very cold in the winter, but it's nice and cozy now – cool in the summer and warm in the winter – and it looks pretty.”

The Shaws knew the house would require some work, but they shied away from taking it on.

“We’re project people,” Brenda said. “We always try to find something to do, the house really evolved as we spiffed it up.”

Spiffing up the 1,100-square-foot home has included installing central heating and air conditioning, a new roof, vinyl siding, insulation and drywall.

One of their major projects was completely renovating the kitchen. “When we first bought it, the cabinets were made out of plywood,” Brenda recalled. “You could see daylight coming through

An amenity she particularly enjoys is the screened porch. "I stay out there quite a lot. We both do, but my husband likes to sit on the carport too. It's got the best view."

Their home's location at the end of a cove and the view it offers was a major selling point for the couple when they bought the property.

"We have a beautiful sunrise view," Brenda said.

Talking comedy with 'The Funniest Man in America'

Ritz Theatre opens its fall-winter season with a night of laughter

Written by Buddy Roberts

James Gregory doesn't consider himself a southern comedian, but he's often described that way.

"I have never, never, not once on stage ever mentioned the words 'Yankee,' 'South,' 'southern,' 'redneck,' 'grits,' 'coon dogs' or 'chewing tobacco,'" he says. "You may think you're hearing that, but you're not."

What the audience will hear – when "The Funniest Man in America" brings his show to the lakeside community as part of the Historic Talladega Ritz Theatre's Fall-Winter Season at 7 p.m. Saturday, November 17 – is a stand-up comedian with a southern accent.

"Here's the difference," Gregory said by phone from his home in Atlanta. "Suppose a comedian from New York comes down South to do a show. Nobody will ever refer to him as northern comedian. But a guy like me, even if I'm talking about the precarious situation of nuclear weapons as it pertains to Iran and Israel, because I have a southern accent, I have to be called a southern comedian."

Whatever he's called, Gregory has made audiences laugh in 38 states and parts of Canada since he began performing stand-up 36 years ago, and he was happy to spend a recent afternoon talking to Lakeside Living about his upcoming show at The Ritz.

Will this be your first show in Talladega?

"Oh, Lord, no, although it's been a few years since I've been in Talladega. But I'm looking forward to coming back. I love the Ritz Theatre and have always had a great turnout there. I love the whole state of Alabama. It's always been like a second home to me. And I remember the last time I did a show in Talladega, somebody brought me some homemade banana nut cake. I hope that person shows up again. That cake doesn't last forever, you know."

What can your audience at the Ritz expect to hear?

"People ask me all the time if I will be doing a totally new show, but nobody really wishes I would do that. Nobody that shows up wants me to do a completely brand new show. They all have their favorite routines they want to hear again. And here's what I try to remember. The people who will show up in Talladega this month – and I know they will – won't be the exact same people who came to my show the last time I was there. Some will have never seen me live before, and another percentage will not have seen one of my shows in the last five or 10 years. So what I do is condense some of the old stories to make room for some of the new, and I blend all that together. What comes out is some of the old, some of the new, some in between, and everybody leaves happy."

What accounts for the popularity of your style of comedy?

"The show that I do is totally believable. My stories are based on reality. Even if I made it up, it's believable. I talk to people after shows, and they tell me things like, 'You must have lived in my neighborhood,' or 'You must have known my grandmother.' Every single person knows somebody like the people in my stories."

Will another comedian open the show for you?

"There will be an opening act in Talladega, but that hasn't been scheduled yet, so I can't tell you who it will be. I only hire comedians who are friends of mine who suit my type of audience. I don't want to show up to work with somebody I've never met and whose material I don't know. The comedians I work with are all non-offensive with down-home humor that's good for families."

Does working family-friendly also account for your popularity?

"I think it's a big reason I've been in the business for as long as I have. Not many comedy shows touring around the country are suitable for all ages. You'd be surprised how many people have never seen live stand-up comedy before. It's great when they experience it for the first time, but so many comedians on stage today are mean, ill-mannered, rude and use foul language. That's why families don't go.

You can come to my shows and bring your parents, your in-laws and your 9-year-old kids. You can't do that at most comedy shows."

How did you get your start in comedy?

"Most people under the age of 35 or 40 don't realize this, but before 1982, the only place in the United States you could see live stand-up comedy was Los Angeles, Boston, New York, Chicago and Cleveland. The first comedy club ever that opened below the Mason-Dixon Line was The Punchline in Atlanta. If it had not opened in 1982, I would not be in the business. Every Tuesday was amateur, or open mic, night, and that's where I got my start. Even comedians who are really famous, like Jerry Seinfeld, Jay Leno, Tim Allen, Roseanne, Ray Romano – most people think of them as the stars of a television show, but to those of us in the business, we knew all those people when they were touring the country making $500 a week as stand-up comedians, and they all started out somewhere on amateur night. That is the only way you get started in this business."

As long as you've been in it, do you still enjoy touring and performing?

"Of course. There is no such thing as a perfect job, whether you're an electrician, truck driver or a comedian. I love doing the shows and being on stage, but traveling is the hardest part for me these days. Now that's not true of Talladega. It's so close to where I live, it's like going to see a neighbor. When I do shows, say, in West Virginia, it's not as easy. But do I still enjoy it? Absolutely. The best part of my day is being on stage."

Will you be dropping a line in Logan Martin Lake while you're in Talladega?

"Well, I'll tell you...when I was a kid, my dad liked to go fishing, and we'd go out on a riverbank and stay overnight in a tent. Nothing fancy. But I went for the food. There is nothing like food cooked on a riverbank. You've got your grill, your charcoal and your cooler, and there is no way a cheeseburger will ever taste better than when you cook it on a riverbank."

Meet Me by the

Written and Photographed
by BUDDY ROBERTS

"It's so peaceful here," Vandrea Watts said as she sat on the shoreline at Alabama Power Company's day-use recreation park at Logan Martin Dam on a bright early autumn afternoon. "I love the breeze." Kimberly Turner agreed as she adjusted her sunglasses and watched the sunlight glisten on the gently moving water.

"There was a lake by my apartment in Virginia when I was at Hampton University," Watts recalled. "I would go over there, sit by the water and just read, think and enjoy God's creation. I have a lot of deep thoughts by the water."

She shared several with Turner that afternoon, about her work at Talladega College, why she pursued chemistry and pharmacy degrees and what she can't live without.

Old friends: Watts and Turner have been best friends since high school, and Watts is godmother to Turner's daughter. "That's what best friends are for, right?"

At Talladega College: Watts returned to her alma mater in February to assume duties as Talladega College's assistant director of institutional research and effectiveness and quality enhancement plan director. She earned an undergraduate degree in chemistry as a member of its class of 2013 (before obtaining a doctorate of pharmacy at Hampton) and held the title of Miss Talladega College during her senior year.

Her work at the college: "Making sure each of the college's departments is in compliance with its accreditation and developing a five-year plan focusing on student success for the entire college." She also serves as an advisor for chemistry students.

Why she studied chemistry: "As a stepping stone to apply for pharmacy school. I made a commitment at the age of 15, in the 10th grade, to pursue a doctorate of pharmacy, to be an additional health and medicine expert within my family. I am one of eight pharmacists. Even though I'm not practicing at the moment because I saw a need I could fill at the college, being a pharmacist allows me the opportunity to educate, update and answer any drug-related questions that my family may have."

What is the role of Talladega College in the community?

"To me, Talladega College is the community. It brings diversity, legacy and strong representation of academic excellence. Being an HBCU, it brings people to Talladega from all over the world."

If she could change the world: "I would make sure higher education and healthcare is affordable for all."

How she describes herself: "Determined and, I hope, genuine. I try to make sure I pray daily to be humble and true to my purpose."

Something an acquaintance might be surprised to know about her: "I love to sleep, and my bed is like my sanctuary."

Three things she can't live without: "Sleep, food and God."

The food she could eat every day: "It's from a food truck in Birmingham called Taste of Jamaica."

The food she hopes she never eats again: "Squash."

What she's most thankful for: "Family."

What she enjoys most about autumn: "I enjoy the colors of the leaves and trees."

What makes her laugh: "My nieces and nephews hysterically laughing."

Her favorite indulgence: "A Hershey's king size cookies and cream bar."

A Real Estate
Property Guide
for Logan Martin Lake
and Surrounding Areas

LAH Real Estate

Newly constructed home in The Reserve is ideal for the lakeside lifestyle

Written by Kelli Tipton
Photographed by Bob Crisp

Those are looking for a place with a lake view to call home should look no further than this newly constructed four-bedroom, two-bath brick home at 81 Lakeside Valley Drive in The Reserve subdivision in Pell City.

The home sits on an interior lot of 0.63 acres with a view of Logan Martin Lake, and the level back yard is a great place to install an in-ground swimming pool. An outdoor irrigation system is ideal for new landscaping, and the enclosed garage is spacious enough for two vehicles and an assortment of lake toys.

Inside, every detail of the open living space was carefully considered by the builder. The main living area features custom hardwood floors, a recessed ceiling and a fireplace with a mantle.

The master suite offers a double vanity and large, walk-in stone shower with a glass door entrance. Two more bedrooms share a spacious hall bath.

In the kitchen, gorgeous granite countertops, stainless steel appliances, and white cabinetry create a clean, modern look. Pendant lighting illuminates a work space that includes a deep double sink.

The upstairs bonus room is ideal for a fourth bedroom or home office.

The 2,226-square-foot home lists for $329,900. For more information call Dana Ellison of LAH Real Estate at 205-870-8580.

Lakeside agent, formerly of Panama City, thankful family is safe

Written by Sherry Kughn
Photograph Submitted

The recent damage to Panama City from Hurricane Michael frightened realtor Sharron Pace, who sells for Re/Max Hometown Properties in Pell City. The fear turned to relief when she learned that all of her family members, including a son and his family, were safe. The damage to their homes, the city, and the surrounding areas was extensive.

Pace, the "caboose" of 11 siblings who grew up in Panama City, said there was never a need to go on vacation when she was growing up because her close-knit family lived on vacation.

"It is truly a little paradise," she said.

The gathering of scallops, oysters, lobsters, and fish from the bays was a favorite pastime for all of them.

Pace, who worked in real estate in Florida when she was in her 20s, left the career because she needed insurance and employee benefits while raising her daughter. She then decided a little more than three years ago to jump back in to real estate and hasn't looked back. She loves what she does.

"I feel as if I am on a treasure hunt to find what another person wants," she said. "It is so rewarding to be with people who are searching for a home or to help them sell and look for a new place."

"I love people and working with people," Pace said, and I love showing homes. It is just a joy."

Pace works for Re/Max under the direction of Sharon Thomas, who Pace describes as an "encyclopedia of knowledge about real estate." She likes the job's flexible hours, and she works many evenings and most weekends. She understands that most people are on a budget, and she works to help them purchase the best home they can.

Pace said she is known for working hard for her clients, and the large number of referrals is proof. Most of those that began as clients are now her friends. She said she works the same for clients, whether they can financially buy high or low.

Her tip to buyers? Find a home that meets your price, or be willing to build to get exactly what you seek. Or, look at existing homes and see "a vision" of making that home the absolute perfect home. "It's very important to see it so you can either rule it out or imagine yourself living there so you can rule it in," she said.

Her tip to sellers? Create floor space and remove furniture or items that are taking up space, which make the home appear smaller. Remove personal items, such as pictures, so the potential buyers can see themselves living there.

"Currently, this is a seller's market so it's a great time," she said.

Pace likes to relax by visiting her grandchildren. She likes to go to Panama City to visit her vast extended family. And she often spends her quality time with them at the beach.
