LETTER

From the Editor

Pontoon luxury multiplied by 1,000

March is a month that is equal parts frustration and anticipation.

Frustrating because the chilly vestiges of winter are still here and it's still too cool to really enjoy being out on the lake, and anticipation because it won't be long until warmer weather will be here. Boating season is on the way, and such events as the 48th annual Birmingham Boat Show only heighten the anticipation.

If you attended the show this year to check out the latest models and innovations (as many Logan Martin residents and enthusiasts regularly do), perhaps you enjoyed seeing the luxury Bennington pontoon boat (valued at more than $250,000) on display by Woods Surfside Marina. It can be fun to see and be dazzled by luxury models, even if function, practicality and affordability tend to drive boat sales more here in Alabama.

A few days ago, I was reading about how Italian watercraft designer Gabriele Teruzzi has created what is being called the ultimate in cruising luxury for the benefit of those who can scrape up several million bucks from under the sofa cushions or the cup holder in their car. He has, quite immodestly, named the 492-foot-long yacht Shaddai (a loose translation of the Hebrew word for "omnipotent").

The vessel's most outstanding feature is a tower rising 125 feet above the water, topped with a master suite (complete with dining area, bar and pool) on a

1,130-square foot terrace. Teruzzi said the design was inspired by contemporary architecture and reflects how "to ascend from the ground has been a desire of humankind since the very beginning."

Comprised of multiple platforms, the Shaddai boasts an infinity pool with waterfall on the aft deck and a 3,000-square foot beach club with an aquarium and yet another pool on the lower deck. The two levels are separated by a glass floor.

Designed to be aesthetically pleasing, the yacht's modern yet futuristic appearance is complemented by furnishings made from materials and textiles produced by top Italian fashion houses. Teruzzi's goal is to give the owner of the incredible vessel "an extreme sense of power. The yacht takes a name that corresponds perfectly to the main concept."

And "concept" is the fitting word, because the Shaddai has not yet been built. It remains just a design, so don't expect to see one tooling around the lake anytime soon. But if anyone happens to have the $250 million lying around that it will take to pay the construction bill, it could still happen.

In the meantime, we have occasion this issue to visit the Logan Martin home of Brandon and Anna Turner, go waterfowl hunting with a local guide, sample the menu at a new lakeside area restaurant and spend some time in the workshop of two craftsmen who are working to keep an ages-old tradition alive.

As always, thank you for joining us and supporting Lakeside Living.

HOOK, LINE & SINKER

THE BEST WAY TO RIG FOR CRAPPIE

Crappies are a popular sport fish wherever they are found, and are known for their sweet-tasting meat and the ease of catching them, particularly when they are in the shallows in the spring. But whether they are in water only a foot or two deep, or suspended over water 50 feet deep, the best way to rig for crappies is with a bobber, sinker, and hook. A live minnow completes the presentation.

The Proper Equipment

Spool 4- to 6-lb. test monofilament line onto your fishing rod and reel. A long, flexible fishing rod is the best choice since it allows for solid hook sets, but also has enough give that it won't tear the hook from a crappie's mouth. Rod sensitivity is not an issue since the bobber serves as the indicator that a crappie is biting. The best hooks are size 4 or 6, depending on the size of minnow you use. A split shot weight or two and a bobber complete the presentation. The bobber should be small enough that a crappie can pull it under easily, but not so small that the minnow can pull it under.

The Bobber Rig Itself

Decide whether you will use a spring bobber (either the ball or pencil-shaped variety) or a slip bobber. A spring bobber is affixed to the line and will not slide up or down, so it is most useful in shallow water. A slip bobber, on the other hand, can be used in both shallow and deep water without affecting anglers' ability to cast. If you are using a slip bobber, slide a bobber stop and a bead onto the fishing line. Then slide on the bobber. Tighten the bobber stop. Tie on the hook you plan to use, and then crimp a split shot or two about 6 inches above the hook. Attach a minnow to the hook. The best way to hook a minnow is just behind the dorsal fin.

The Proper Depth

Determine how deep you want the minnow to swim. If the crappies are in just a few feet of water, the minnow should hang between 6 inches and 12 inches from the bottom. If the crappies are suspended in open water, the minnow should hang at or above the depth at which they are located. If you are using a spring bobber, attach it to the line above the split shot weights. The distance between the hook and bobber should be the distance below the water's surface that you want the minnow to hang. If you are using a slip bobber, slide the bobber stop to the proper location, and then tighten it. The distance between the bobber stop and the hook should be the distance below the surface that you want the minnow to hang.

For 48th year, Birmingham Boat Show exhibits the latest watercraft models

Written and photographed by JOHN DOWD

With spring approaching, many lake dwellers and outdoors enthusiasts are thinking about what they may need for getting back out on the water come warmer weather.

An opportunity for them to see the latest in watercraft and accessories was the recently held 48th annual Birmingham Boat Show. As in past years, Logan Martin Lake was well-represented at the exposition by local marinas, dock builders, real estate professionals and more. Hundreds of visitors attended the four-day event.

One of the many things to see at this year's show was a 20-yard-long indoor trout pond. It was brought back from previous years because of its popularity. The pond contained over 2,000 fish and was again the most visited attraction of the show.

As one might expect, the show featured some spectacular boats, including a 2019 Bennington luxury pontoon with all the bells and whistles, valued

Another popular exhibit this year was a small booth manned by Spencer Phillips, a dive Instructor for more than 20 years and one of the owners of Southern Skin Divers Supply in Birmingham, a small shop that hosts dive trips and trains and certifies divers. Phillips is also involved in underwater salvage and archaeology. He and his partners often discover artifacts of value during their dives, including gold and fossils, some of which were on display during the boat show.

PLAN TO 'HUNT SMARTER, NOT HARDER' NEXT WATERFOWL SEASON

Logan Martin, Coosa River guide offers advice for local duck hunters

Written and photographed
by JOHN DOWD

Waterfowl hunting is growing in popularity, throughout Alabama and around Logan Martin Lake.

Although the season ended in late January, now is the perfect time to begin preparing for the start of the 2019-20 season in the fall, according to a lakeside area hunting guide.

"When I was young, I spent my time hunting, and now that I'm older I spend more time scouting," said Cody Alford, owner of Coosa Bend Kennels, guide for the Dream Ranch hunting lodge and longtime hunter around Logan Martin Lake and the Coosa River. He's a firm believer in "hunting smarter, not harder."

"For the smart hunter, prep time has begun now that the season has ended," he said. "This is the time to get out and start scouting." Alford always spends time studying areas before he hunts there, and if the waterfowl just aren't landing at a particular spot he's considering ("perhaps two or three birds”), he moves on to another.

He also believes it’s a good idea for hunters to arrive at their chosen blinds early in the morning, before 6 a.m. and to leave later, around 10 a.m. “There is nothing like hitting that early morning chill as you leave the car and hike out to the blind.”

The waterfowl will arrive early in the morning, when they are moving around looking to feed. Then they pick up and fly off again to find a different place to roost. This, under natural circumstances, likely lends in their higher survival rate, but to an observant hunter, it offers a chance at a second shot.

Another thing to consider, Alford advises, is overpopulation of decoys. When he hunts Logan Martin, he rarely brings more than 12 decoys. "Any more than that and the birds will feel crowded." On larger lakes, however, he usually puts out 30 or more.

Motion is another key factor in getting the birds to land where you want them. "Especially because it is illegal to shoot out of the boat when hunting the lakes and rivers," he says. One way to keep the birds where you can see them is using a decoy that creates surface movement on the water, such as a battery powered wave maker, or even an old-fashioned jerk string. This keeps the fowl from thinking something is amiss.

Another final consideration when hunting Logan Martin Lake is the water level. Hunting becomes very hard when the water level is too low because often ducks in the south like to feed near oak trees where they drop acorns into the shallow water near the bank, Alford says. When the water level drops, the shoreline moves away from these trees and the acorns fall onto the ground to get picked off by the squirrels and other animals. This determines the better location to hunt on a given day.

Later winter and early spring is a good time for waterfowl hunters to begin preparing for the new hunting season, which starts in the fall.

Portions of the lake, such as Broken Arrow Creek, that are higher up and closer to the dams will fill with water sooner and faster than the lower portions. These areas are also less populated, and with fewer houses, making them more desirable hunting grounds.

Waterfowl hunting in the state is regulated by the Wildlife & Freshwater Fisheries Division of the Alabama Department of Conservation and Natural Resources. Hunters – especially those who will be hunting waterfowl for the first time next season – are encouraged to make sure they have meet all legal requirements, which include a valid hunting license, federal and state duck stamps and Harvest Information Program certification.

Lakeside area craftsmen are keeping Native American traditional skills alive

Written and photographed by
SHERRY KUGHN

Huddled over a table in a crowded backyard shop near Pell City, Gerald Hoyle and Bill Starnes practice the art of flintknapping obsidian, quartz, chert and other materials into arrowheads, stone knives and spearheads.

The longtime friends recently showed me how the process works.

First, I watched as Hoyle, 74, placed a pair of protective glasses over his eyes to avoid the danger of flying shards of glass, and he pulled on a pair of gloves to protect his hands. Next, he retrieved a special board he uses to hold pieces of stone in place while he works on them. He then picked up a thick dowel stick fitted with a copper cap and, finally, a slab of obsidian, a type of hardened lava.

Holding the dowel stick with one hand, he struck the dark gray piece of obsidian on its two-inch side until a thin, oval-shaped slice of the stone fell into his hand. He held it up to a desk lamp and let the light shine through the piece, nodding with satisfaction and pointing out how transparent the stone is when it's thinner.

"This," he said, "can be made into an arrowhead." He set it aside to work on later.

Twelve years ago, Hoyle started flintknapping and has since enjoyed making items to give away, display or keep.

Starnes, who was watching Hoyle, has been a practitioner for much longer.

"I started flintknapping as a Boy Scout when I was about 12," he said. He's now 84. "I have been collecting artifacts all of my life. The workmanship of the Indians is astonishing. I like knowing how they rounded up a piece of material and made it into a tool or a weapon."

Both retirees chose this hobby because of their fondness for arrowheads and other Native American artifacts.

Hoyle picked up another piece of obsidian, this one up the stone creates friction and allows the copper tip to 'catch' the edge."

He placed the rectangular stone between two pieces of parallel wood on the board, pieces cut at an 80-degree angle. He then sharpened a piece of copper.

"This old copper was hard," he said. "I had to take a hammer to straighten it."

The copper tip protruded from a dowel stick that he had placed in a one-inch eye-bolt, a loop that allows him to obtain a mechanical advantage. The process increases the pressure on the stone and helps flake the material using just the right amount of pressure at the perfect angle.

"Physics," he said. "Pressure and angle, that's all it is."

Native Americans, he explained, would have taken an antler in one hand, and would have placed a piece of leather on their leg as they laid the obsidian down with the other hand. Then they would have flaked pieces off, turning the obsidian over and over.

Next, Hoyle turned the obsidian over himself, to its opposite edge. He began flaking anew.

"I am literally thinning it down," he said.

When finished with the thinning process, he set the blade down and prepared to further refine it. He picked up a four-inch round rock that he had once found when hunting artifacts. It was about two inches tall and had a slightly graduated indentation ground into its center.

"This is a nutting stone made by Native Americans," he said.

He laid it onto a piece of tan-colored, soft leather on the worktable and folded half of the leather over the stone. He took another dowel stick – one with a sharper copper tip – and began chipping until the knife had a tapered point and indentations near the bottom. The indentations are where a piece of sinew could be wound in order to hold the blade onto a knife handle.

Neither man has Native American ancestors, but both have wives with great-grandmothers who are of Cherokee descent.

"That makes me feel really good because I have a lot of respect for Native Americans and a lot of ill feelings about what the colonists did to them," said Hoyle.

He is married to Mary Hoyle, and Starnes is married to Linda Carroll Parker Starnes.

"Anybody with Native American blood in them should be proud," Hoyle said.

Starnes said that when he was 12 years old, he shopped at a store called Mays & Jones in Pell City, which is still standing but out of operation. While there, he found a $5 kit for making arrowheads, which started his interest in flintknapping.

Nowadays, Starnes and Hoyle, along with a younger flintknapping student, meet every Thursday night to hone their skills.

Occasionally, the friends travel to events in the northeast Alabama area to demonstrate their skills. Hoyle has an invitation to do so in Georgia this spring, and next fall, he will go, as he does annually, to nearby Williams Intermediate School for Colonial Day.

Hoyle looked at some of his artifacts.

"I like to lay my hands on something that Native Americans held," he said. "I wonder where the item has been, what it has done and what lives it has touched. I just like to think about that."

Before I left, Hoyle picked up the blade he had made, laid it in his palm, and wiped off any stray flecks.

"See how this looks like a knife blade?" he asked.

The craftsman will likely finish the knife by adding the handle, which requires a different skill set, one that involves knowing how to make antlers into handles using a sander. He will include his new knife in the next collection of items that he takes and shows to others.

Meanwhile, he, Starnes and their flintknapping student will gather next week to make arrowheads and knives, much as Native Americans did centuries ago.

that are sure to remind diners of how tasty it is to live in the Southeast.

The flight-themed restaurant is owned by Kevin Smith, who grew up in the lakeside area and now resides in Fort Myers, Florida. As a youngster, he was fascinated with the stories he heard about Dr. Lewis Archer Boswell (who was a friend and neighbor of his great-great-grandfather Henry Champion) and the adventurous test flights he conducted from his Red Hill property, which was located in the Eastaboga area.

"Dr. Boswell is recognized as one of the most influential early pioneers of heavier-than-air flight," Smith said. "On one of his attempts to fly his airplane, he started from the top of his barn and flew over Grandpa Champion's farm, and he witnessed it."

The restaurant's interior offers affectionate nods to this history with its barn red wall and propeller blade-style ceiling fans. The atmosphere is laid-back and casual. Diners eat with plastic forks and wipe their hands with paper towels. The food is served on metal trays, and sodas and tea are self-served from a drink station in the corner.

But it's the slow-cooked, tender meat with that distinct smoky flavor and aroma that keeps them coming back again and again.

"We have two smokers going at all times," Smith said. "We go through six or seven cases of wings an hour, and they are served straight from the smoker." The wings are slow-smoked over natural cherry wood and seasoned to perfection

Pulled pork is another popular item on the menu. "Southern style pork butts are dry-rubbed with our special blend of spices and smoked low and slow over a blend of natural woods until we can pull the bone out. We hand pull each piece and add a few southern touches just before it's ready to eat," he said.

The poultry is shown the same love.

"Our mouth-watering turkey is lightly dusted with our special blend of spices and smoked slow over a blend of natural woods," Smith said. "We slice each piece to order to lock in the natural juices and flavors. Our smoked sliced chicken is

Pell City couple loves lakeside living in The Reserve

Turner family is thankful for their quiet residence on Logan Martin

Written by Sherry Kughn
Photographed by Bob Crisp

Brandon and Anna Turner were living in Riverside, just off Alabama 78, when they began looking for a new house. When they saw the lot and neighborhood in The Reserve on Logan Martin Lake, they were smitten.

Now, more than a decade later, the couple, along with their two daughters – Piper Addison, age 9, and Millie Bleu, age 3 – live in their Craftsman style lakeside home, which perfectly suits their family.

The windows in their home allow them to enjoy their favorite aspect of lake living – the views. They also admire the views from their ample, L-shaped porch with a bed swing.

“We enjoy the sunrises and sunsets,” Brandon said. “The way the sun beams off the water with the bridge in the background is stunning.”

“Our house is up on a little rise with a panoramic lake view,” Anna said. “We are blessed to live here. We actually came to the neighborhood one time, and we saw this area, immediately picked out our lot and knew this was where we were meant to be."

Perhaps Brandon and Anna were also "just meant to be." They were classmates as students in Pell City schools, but they did not begin dating until a couple of years after graduating.

The Turners, longtime Pell City residents, wanted to build a custom house on the lot. They chose HardiePlank and Norandex Home Accent Shakes for the exterior. It is a one-level house but has a bonus playroom above the garage. The open floor plan allows the family to enjoy hosting holiday dinners. The kitchen

The backyard features Limelight hydrangeas, which are known to grow in rows and produce large greenish-white blossoms on strong stems. One purple azalea grows in the front yard.

The yard also features a trampoline for the girls and a tiny cottage-like playhouse. The girls have asked for a playground set, which will probably be the next addition to the Turner household.

Logan Martin provides setting for new inspirational mystery novel

Written by CHRIS NORWOOD
Submitted photos

Michael Garrett's book "Innocence Denied" is a part inspirational Christian fiction, part murder mystery, set largely against the backdrop of Logan Martin Lake's Talladega shoreline.

According to a synopsis provided by the book's publisher, the protagonist, Derrick Walton, is "a devout Christian (who) temporarily leaves the comfort of his Talladega County home for an Arizona retreat. His respite is interrupted, however, when, on a mission to atone for his sins, he risks his own life to save a helpless woman in distress."

That woman, as it turns out, is Larissa Baxter, "an unbeliever (and) a gorgeous Arizona socialite who has always relied on her striking beauty to get what she wants. After being falsely arrested for murder and posting bail, however, she realizes that overwhelming circumstantial evidence will likely result in her conviction, and she faces life in prison." She instead goes on the run disguised as a cancer patient with her hair shaved off and no makeup.

Derrick and Larissa end up escaping across the country and hiding out back at the lake, according to the synopsis. "As their lives begin to settle into some sense of normalcy, the unlikely two become emotionally involved in a love like neither has ever experienced." Derrick begins witnessing to her as his own health declines. "Although Larissa remains a target of the FBI as a wanted fugitive, she learns there are more important things in life than glitz and glamour and accepts Jesus as her savior."

On the book's official website, www.innocencedeniedbook.com, Garrett says, "Although I was educated for a career in the business world, I never felt comfortable there. Having had an interest in writing since childhood, I decided to pursue a sideline career in the publishing industry. The Lord blessed me along the way and led me to success with secular fiction and as a book editor. I served as an Editorial Associate for the Writer's Digest School and taught weekend writing workshops at colleges and universities across the nation."

After laying aside his own writing for several years, Garrett (who kept a house on Logan Martin Lake for some time) said, "Several years ago an idea for a suspenseful secular novel occurred to me, but I could never talk myself into actually writing it. Again, I was heavily involved in my editing business and couldn't get motivated to commit the idea to text.

"Sometime during 2016, I was particularly moved by a church sermon about using our spiritual gifts in service to God. I felt ashamed that I had never honored God through my writing for granting me the skills that made me happy in life, and about that same time I felt a gentle prodding from God that the story that had nagged me for years could be converted into a Christian novel that could possibly inspire some of its readers to study His word."

He added, "Innocence Denied was written with unbelievers in mind. My goal was to subtly witness to them through the character development, but therein lies a problem – an unbeliever would be unlikely to read a Christian novel without being coaxed by someone of respect. I encourage readers to give their copy to a reader who needs to hear its message. Perhaps he/she will get caught up in the story before the witnessing begins late in the novel."

Innocence Denied is available through Amazon, Walmart, Target, Books-A-Million and Barnes & Noble.

Family home in Skyline subdivision offers plenty of lakeside amenities

Written by BUDDY ROBERTS
Submitted photos

Prospective buyers who are seeking a spacious family home in a lakeside setting that is perfect for boating, fishing and enjoying Logan Martin sunsets may find what they're looking for in the property at 1237 Funderburg Bend Road, in Pell City's Skyline subdivision.

Built in 2006, the 1,780-square foot home has 1.5 levels containing three bedrooms and 2.5 baths. On the main level are the master suite, kitchen with custom tile and breakfast bar, formal dining area and an office that could be used as an extra bedroom. The two family bedrooms are upstairs.

Exterior amenities include a covered porch that is ideal for entertaining, grilling and enjoying the lake views. A 48x38 shop is perfect for projects, and a separate two-car garage offers extra space for storage. The home comes with a deeded waterfront lot with a recently built pier that is .7 miles from the house.

The property lists at $299,999. For more information, call Maria Price with RE/MAX Southern Homes at 205-812-4921.

For The Bain Team, real estate is all in the family

Karen & Adam Bain

Written by Laci Braswell
Photo Submitted

For Fields/Gossett Realtors Karen and Adam Bain, their job is all about teamwork, and the mother and son enjoy working together for the Pell-City based company.

"We make a great team," Karen said.

"We each have our own set of strengths, and we use them in the field," Adam added. "I enjoy working with the outside landscape and financial aspect. My mom is a wonderful decorator and is always keeping up with the latest trends. She really knows how to help interested sellers make their home attractive to buyers."

Both live on the lake and love being near the water. Adam and his wife Kelsey have a daughter, Sawyer, who will be a year old in March. Karen is married to husband Bill Jones.

Karen is a graduate of Pell City High School and Jacksonville State University. She received her real estate license in 2006 and started working for Fields/Gossett Realty in 2007

"Real estate is actually my second career. I worked for 25 years in the Pell City school system," she said. "I bring the same work ethic and enthusiasm that I had for education into my real estate career. Being compassionate is important, especially in realty."

Adam is a 2006 Pell City graduate and also attended Jacksonville state, where he first pursued studies in accounting.

"My father is an accountant, but I decided that it wasn't for me," he said. "However, I do think it is a strength of mine as a Realtor. I still enjoy working with numbers." Adam joined Fields/Gossett in spring of 2013.

"We both knew this was the right place for us," Karen said.

The team members' hobbies (fishing for Adam and boating for Karen) often help them professionally when working with clients seeking lakeside property. "I'm very knowledgeable about Logan Martin and all the surrounding lakes," Adam said, as Karen added, "We both love being on the water when we have time."

Whether one is interested in buying or selling a lake home, now is a good time to enter the market, according to Karen.

"Now is definitely the time to buy and sell. We have a high number of interested buyers, but not enough homes on the market. If you're thinking about selling, do it soon, because it is always changing,"
