'Nurse Jackie' Struggles to Regain Her Position for Last Rounds

By Dan Rice
FYI Television, Inc.

Everyone's favorite flawed healthcare provider, Jackie Peyton (Edie Falco), is now in real need of healing herself, at least in regard to her career. Following her failed flight from justice and car crash while under the influence, she suffered through withdrawal from opiate addiction in a jail cell, followed by the relatively easy ride of sedated detox. Now she's clean and sober, but realizing what she wants and needs the most – the return to the nursing profession at All Saints – may be the most elusive high of all as "Nurse Jackie" airs in its seventh and final season, Sunday at 8 p.m. on Showtime.

After a humiliating and very public dismissal by Akalitus (Anna Deavere Smith), Jackie hired a hot-shot attorney (Mark Feuerstien, "Royal Pains") to get her job back, but to pay his exorbitant retainer fee she was forced to sell prescription drugs she lifted from an overmedicated home-healthcare patient (Leslie Uggams) she'd been caring for. Lawyered-up, Jackie is conceded a nurse's aide position until her nurse's license goes under review, but that's under a strict Diversion Program requiring daily urine screens and no contact with patients or medication. Akalitus is intent upon seeing Jackie either fail or give up, assigning her such menial tasks as cleaning exam rooms and moving dead bodies, and enlisting a reluctant Zoey (Merritt Wever) to monitor her every movement. But if Jackie's determination to remain a nurse moved her to finally end her life-defining addiction, she's not about to let anyone else ruin it for her.

What lies at the end of the road for "Nurse Jackie" is a matter of uncertainty for longtime fans of the Emmy-winning show, and they shouldn't necessarily expect a pleasant resolution, as executive producer Clyde Phillips ("Dexter"), for one, isn't a believer in happy endings. "No, I'm not," he stresses. "I'm a believer in authentic endings. And I think that the end of this season is as authentic as it can possibly be and will be really satisfying to the viewers.

"I think that had we been renewed for another year, we could have delivered a terrific year. That said, when we got the phone call from David (Nevins, president) and the others at Showtime that this would be the final season, it made sense in a way. We had told the up and back story of addiction and of trust and of love and of consequence, and of the shrapnel that a drug addict has inflicted upon her colleagues and her family and her friends in about as many ways as we possibly could. And I think that we're ending in a graceful and authentic way this year."

For series star Falco, her realistic portrayal of a functioning addict has, in a larger sense, logically run its course, and she has noticed how viewers' perception of the character has evolved over the years. "I think it's changed," she says. "I mean, I don't have a real bird's eye view of people's experience of the show, but from the things that I've heard, you start out rooting for her, and then you start understanding why it gets harder and harder to do so as her behavior becomes more and more despicable."

Falco allows that the longtime role may have also altered her own perceptions about addiction.

"I have known and loved many addicts in my life," she discloses, "and it is a frustrating and no-win proposition. And it has been very interesting to be on the other side of it, to kind of get a taste of what kind of what misery they must have to go through really, being at the mercy of something that's bigger than them. So, it's given me a lot more compassion for the people that used to just make me angry, they make me a little bit sadder now. I think that's probably a good thing, though it doesn't always feel good. But yeah, there's been a significant change in that."

The seven-season run of "Nurse Jackie" has allowed for the evolution of the supporting characters as well, which has made the experience all the more positive for Falco's co-stars. "I think one of the nice parts about being on a show for multiple seasons is that the writers begin to write for you," notes Wever, whose role as the perky and caring Zoey has always been a fan favorite. "I think they know that I enjoy doing physical stuff, the physically absurd possibly. So, they give me little nuggets of fun every so often, yeah."

Stephen Wallem's role as the kindhearted Thor has incorporated many of the actor's real-life struggles on "Nurse Jackie," airing Sundays at 8 p.m. on Showtime.

But perhaps the actor who benefitted the most on a personal level from the extended character development is Stephen Wallem, the brother of show creator Linda Wallem who plays the kindhearted, gay nurse Thor. "Wow, it's been an incredible gift, because I've never had a role sort of custom-tailored to so many issues in my own life," he reveals. "And then when they came to me in season two and said, 'How do you feel about incorporating your own struggles with diabetes and the fact that you lost your eyesight in one eye?' – I've never been faced with any sort of choice like that, especially to a worldwide audience. And it was an incredible gift I doubt I will ever get again quite like that."

TRIVIA CHAIN

Marvel Cinematic Universe

1. In 2008, the Marvel Cinematic Universe media franchise released its first film, this origin story of a cocky industrialist who transforms himself into a superhero with his own defense technology.
2. MCU's second film follows a mild-mannered scientist used as a pawn in a military super-soldier program, in which a gamma radiation accident turns him into a belligerent behemoth.
3. The next character introduced by MCU is drawn from Norse mythology, here the crown prince of Asgard who is exiled to Earth for his arrogance.
4. MCU's next film goes back

- recruit is transformed into a super soldier and sent to stop a Nazi plan to use a powerful artifact.
5. For the next MCU release, the first four heroes are teamed together along with agents working for a top-secret counterterrorism organization.
 6. Following a string of superhero sequels, MCU then introduced this misfit band containing a thief, an assassin, two bounty hunters and a mad warrior.
 7. This summer brings the next new hero of the Marvel Cinematic Universe, a petty criminal enabled by a substance to greatly shrink in size while increasing in strength.

Jimmy Fallon

Yesterday President Obama traveled to Jamaica, where he will meet with students and Caribbean leaders. Jamaica's such a beautiful place, Obama says he can't wait to just take it all in, hold it for several seconds and then exhale.

In a new interview, the president discussed the upcoming election. He said that Hillary Clinton is going to do great as a presidential candidate. When asked how Biden would do, Obama said, "Hillary's going to do great."

Conan O'Brien

In a recent interview, Michelle Obama said that the Secret Service taught Malia how to drive. In exchange, Malia taught the Secret Service how to throw a party when her parents are away.

The campaign to put a woman on the $20 bill has narrowed the choices down to four finalists. The four finalists are Rosa Parks, Harriet Tubman, Eleanor Roosevelt and Flo from the Progressive Insurance

Jimmy Kimmel

A man has been arrested in Chicago after a returning from a failed attempt to join ISIS. Man, how do you blow it with ISIS? "Derth to America! I mean, death! Death to America! Can I try it again?"

Moments in Time

On April 29, 1429, 17-year-old French peasant Joan of Arc leads a French force in relieving the city of Orleans, besieged by the English. At the age of 16, "voices" of Christian saints told Joan to aid Charles, the French dauphin, in expelling the English from France.

On April 27, 1805, in North Africa, a small force of U.S. Marines marches against Tripoli's port city of Derna to depose the ruling pasha. The phrase "to the shores of Tripoli," from the official song of the U.S. Marine Corps, has its origins in the Derna campaign.

On April 28, 1916, Ferruccio Lamborghini, the founder of the company that bears his name, is born in Italy. After experiencing mechanical difficulties with a Ferrari, Lamborghini decided to start his own rival sportscar company, even hiring a former Ferrari engineer.

On May 3, 1933, James Brown is born. Known as "The Godfather of Soul," Brown honed his musical talents in prison, where he was to serve 8-16 years for stealing at the age of 15. The Georgia parole board was impressed enough to release him after only three years.

On April 30, 1945, holed up in a bunker under his headquarters in Berlin, Nazi leader Adolf Hitler commits suicide by swallowing a cyanide capsule and shooting himself in the head. Soon after, Germany unconditionally surrendered to the Allied forces.

On May 1, 1958, President Dwight Eisenhower proclaims Law Day to honor the role of law in the creation of the United States of America, followed by Congress passing a joint resolution establishing May 1 as Law Day. The idea of a Law Day had first been proposed in 1957 by the American Bar Association.
