Reality Competition Re-Imagined as Fantasy Adventure

Dan Rice

FYI Television, Inc.

The worlds of fantasy adventure and reality competition collide this summer as the spirited search for the one true hero begins on "The Quest," premiering Thursday at 7 p.m. on ABC. From the executive producer of "The Lord of the Rings" film trilogy and the executive producers of "The Amazing Race," this genremixing series takes a dozen contestants into the medieval kingdom of Everealm, where ogres and dragons stir in the dark woods while an evil lord threatens the peaceful reign of the queen. Only the 12 summoned paladins (knightly warriors) can stave off the chaos, and of them, only one will rise to be the queen's champion.

"There was sort of a seed of the project back in 1999 when we were making "The Lord of the Rings," recounts executive producer Mark Ordesky, "and all the actors were in horse camp and sword camp and archery camp, and my partner, Jane Fleming, and I had thought, 'Wouldn't it be cool if real people could go to horse camp and sword camp and archery camp?" From across the country, the call for heroes was answered by all walks of life, with a bartender, a homemaker, a horse trainer, a math teacher and a mixed martial artist among those competing in elimination challenges of combat skills and strategies that test stamina, intelligence and resourcefulness. Their ranks are greeted at Everealm and guided through its mythology by numerous characters of the kingdom, which is further populated by scores of extras and several monstrous creatures, the latter achieved through state-of-theart projections, prosthetics and even animatronics. The ambitious project required not only large tracts of secluded land but an actual castle, and this took the production all the way to Austria. "When we created the show," explains executive producer Rob Eric, "we wanted our paladins, our contestants, to be completely immersed in a real world, and so we looked at an enormous amount of castles and a lot of locations, and unfortunately some of those places were right next door to a highway or there was a Burger King behind it. So, we found a place where we could actually be on 70 acres of land and away from everything and completely immerse our paladins into an environment, [where] they lived in a castle that had no running water, no electricity. It needed to feel completely, 100 percent real to them."

Fortunately, the resultant fantasy adventure seems fairly believable to viewers as well – thanks to the surprisingly credible acting of the Everealm characters and the cinematic look of the narrative scenes, which make this hybrid series a resounding success.

"It was shot in real time because we wanted it to feel authentic and in the moment," relates executive producer Elise Doganieri. "We instructed the actors that they really had to know their character biographies - who they were, where they came from - and if a contestant asked them any question they would be ready to answer with the confidence of being that person. It was quite shocking and stunning how they handled it – in a good way."

Adding to the Everealm experience is a high caliber of special effects previously unseen on reality shows. "We used a process called 3-D projection," Eric gives in example, "which can make an environment feel like the walls are falling apart or a monster is coming through an environment. It's amazing technology. They used it when Madonna performed at the Super Bowl and it looked like the grass was vibrating. We were able to actually use that element hidden very elaborately so that for certain scenes it became exceptionally real for the paladins because it looked like it was really happening."

But even with all the technology, the producers were most impressed by how their constructed world drew a real sense of heroism from the amateur knights. "Probably the best part for me," reveals Ordesky, "is the fact that in an immersive environment like this where you have people who love fantasy films, gaming and literature as contestants, these folks get to operate on a stage that's bigger than life. And in doing so, they get to have these transformative experiences where they do things that are beyond the grasp of everyday life. And it affects them, and it changes them. And that was a super gratifying part of the fantasy element of the show."

"For me," says Doganieri in turn, "watching them see certain things that sometimes they had only imagined in their mind or tried to visualize inside a video game, this was all of that come to life, and they were literally living in the environment that they had always dreamed that they had wanted to be in. "I also thigh for these com

"I also think for these contestants who love this sort of fantasy world, they wanted to believe in it so they really got into it," Doganieri continues, "and we saw people overcoming their own insecurities, their own fears, and there was a true respect for their fellow paladins where they were all trying to better themselves, because ultimately it is about becoming the one true hero who's going to save the kingdom from the evil villain. It's really wonderful to see people working not only to compete against each other, but also looking for each other's success in that same moment. It's an incredible journey to watch unfold."

Tom Ellis Lands Complex Role

Candace havens FYI Television, Inc.

Like many actors, Tom Ellis, who starred on the popular comedy "Miranda" in the U.K., found himself typecast. He'd played a wholesome character (Gary) on the show and couldn't seem to break out of that mold, until Jonathan Levine saw an audition tape Ellis made for "Rush," airing Thursday at 8 p.m. on USA.

Before the audition, the Welsh actor had returned to the theater to work in a play. He said it was a form of therapy for him. "I needed to get away from television for a little bit," he says. "I came from the theater and it was a good time for me to go back. It was almost like going to rehab. When I finished, I was ready to challenge myself. I had a good feeling when I did the video, but I never imagined that executive producer Jonathan Levine would call me.

"The opportunity to work with him was incredible," says Ellis. "I love his movies. But when we first talked, I knew I needed to work with this guy. Someone who writes and directs is very unusual in TV these days. The way that Jonathan works is a very freeing and collaborative feeling, which isn't usually the way it works in TV. The script stuck out. It was the most interesting thing I'd read. I got to page three and I was like, 'Oh, my God, I want to be this guy.' He's a gift."

Dr. William Rush (Ellis) is a concierge doctor for the rich and famous in Los Angeles. But, unlike the similar USA show "Royal Pains," this one isn't so bright and shiny. A recreational drug user - some might say an addict, Rush will fix anyone, as long as they can pay cash. He doesn't judge his patients, but he insists that those working for him, including his trusty assistant Eve (Sarah Habel), follow his mandate that it's just about the money. While Eve accepts Rush for who is, as does his best friend Dr. Alex (Larenz Tate), they sometimes serve as moral compasses.

Rush is the polar opposite of what Ellis had been playing. "Rush is very complex," says the actor. "There's a fine line between the sort of moral ambiguity of the character on the surface and what's really going on. He's a despicable character on the surface, who is doing despicable things. I read the script and I kind of loved the guy. Finding a way of playing this guy, who does all these things but you still love him, was the first hurdle. But my instincts were to try and find some empathy for the character and why he made the decisions he did.

"Accepting the fact that we're human beings and we're all flawed, and then finding some justification from his point of view. Not condoning his actions, but understanding why he might do that. Stripping away all the layers and getting to the heart of it, there's a human being there. Then you find out why over time what made this guy the way he is."

To say Rush has demons is an understatement. "I think the way that we service the back story is that he is a brilliant doctor," says Ellis. "He had a very disappointing situation that happened that meant the loss of his medical license. He has his license back, but that affected him. The result of that, mixed in with his selfmedication, shows you that he's trying very hard not to care. He doesn't ask any questions. He just turns up and does the job and takes the money. He thinks that's the way he wants to be. He is able to disassociate the way he really feels by numbing himself with drugs. But it's just not that simple. We say that he's aquaplaning through life. He's on the surface, but every once in a while something happens that jerks him back to reality." The biggest dose of reality is the one woman he can't have, Sarah (Odette Annable). She is the love of Rush's life, but she doesn't want to be with him anymore. "She sees right through him," says Ellis. "She understands him better than anyone, which makes him vulnerable. He doesn't like that. But he wants to be a better person when she's around. She can't change him, but she is the one person who can make him take stock. Make him look at himself and his life. He doesn't do that often. I think he wants to be different in many ways, but he's just not ready. That's what's so fascinating about all of this. The more sober moments that happen, the more consequences, the more he wakes up. But it's a spiral. And you don't really know where he's going to end up."

Rockin' the Screens

1. One of the most iconic entertainers of all time, this rock 'n' roll singer's greatest cinematic moment came in his third film, where he performed his gyrating dance moves while wearing a prison uniform.

2. That star's 15th movie was set in Las Vegas, and features as his leading lady this multitalented redheaded actress.

3. She was still stunning 11 years later when she played the mother of a deaf, dumb and blind boy who had a gift for pinball in this 1975 rock opera.

4. Still a major act all these supergroup responsible for that rock masterwork has recently been part of our contemporary TV soundtrack, providing the theme songs for the three series of this forensics procedural franchise.

Today is National Sugar Cookie Day. The entire month of July is National Cream Month. You're welcome, diabetes.

Wyoming became a state on this day in 1918. Everybody celebrated from Cheyenne to another city in Wyoming.

Wyoming is one of the few states that doesn't have a pro sports team. So, happy birthday. You can have the Lakers.

People who wanted to go on the new Harry Potter ride at Universal had to wait in line for more than seven hours this week. That's right, seven hours of waiting just for a couple minutes of action. Or, as that's also called, "watching soccer."
