LETTER

From the Editor

Another year, another January

January is a peculiar month.

The month-and-a-half before the calendar turns the page on the passing year tends to have a cozy and festive feel, but that usually doesn't remain past the college bowl games sometime during the first week of the new year. Festivities are then put on hold until the Super Bowl, which sometimes isn't until early February.

In between is January. Cold, stark, gloomy, boring old January. The bridge between years, named for the two-faced Roman deity Janus, god of transitions, beginnings, and endings.

A month that, compared with others that are more eventful, just doesn't seem to have a lot going for it.

Maybe the rather blah nature of January is why so many daily and monthly observances -- some official but mostly otherwise -- have been added to the month's calendar. Sure, most of them are a bit (or a lot) on the silly side, but they do infuse January with a bit of character and whimsy it might not otherwise have.

Here are some of the daily observances coming up this month.

January 2
National Science Fiction Day

January 4
National Braille Day

January 8
National Bubble Bath Day

January 10
National Houseplant Appreciation Day

January 11
National Human Trafficking Awareness Day

January 12
National Hot Tea Day

January 15
National Strawberry Ice Cream Day

January 16
National Nothing Day

January 20
National Cheese Lovers Day

January 21
National Squirrel Appreciation Day

January 24
National Green Juice Day

January 27
National Chocolate Cake Day

January 29
National Corn Chip Day

January 30
National Croissant Day

January's monthly observances tend to be more educational in nature and have less to do with food and beverages. This month has, for example, been designated as:

National Braille Literacy Month
National Bath Safety Month
National Hobby Month
National Mentoring Month
Thyroid Awareness Month
National Glaucoma Awareness Month
National Cervical Health Awareness Month
Birth Defects Prevention Month
National Soup Month (okay, some of them are associated with food)

Whatever you decide to observe during January, the publisher and staff of Lakeside Living thank you for starting another year with us. In this issue, you'll go on a visit to an absolutely magical place called History Incorporated, meet lakeside area singer and The Voice contestant Berritt Haynes, get a ringside seat at the Logan Martin Rumble, and tour the waterfront home of Billy and Leslie Weller. This issue, I'm happy to say, especially spotlights the talent and skill of our staff photographers, Bob Crisp and Tucker Webb.

We're proud to be Logan Martin Lake's original and premier magazine. Thank you for joining us for another year of Lakeside Living.

Slow things down to catch January bass

The month of January can pose challenging fishing conditions. With some of the coldest weather of the year, fish activity can often times be very slow.

Slow is the key word for January. As water temperatures continue to decline, fish will become lethargic and sluggish. This is mainly because fish are cold-blooded, meaning their body temperature relates to the water temperature.

With decreased metabolism rates, you'll need to fish ultra slow and precise. Key targets to look for include any kind of rock structures. Rock will hold heat and maintain heat longer than any other structures. The ends of boat ramps and sea walls are also great concrete structures this time of year.

Bass will bite flat-sided red crank baits in the mid depth range, red shad raps, and red rattle traps. Fish all of these baits slowly, crawling them through the rocks. Also fish slowly crawfish-imitating baits such as Finesse Jigs. Crawfish are a major part of largemouth and spotted bass diets in the wintertime. Rock banks in main feeder creeks and secondary points are great starting points. Rocks on current breaks along the main river are also major producers in the winter.

Try to fish on warm days. Fish activity will increase with a series of warm trends. Stick it out – warm weather is just around the corner!

What's old is new again at History Incorporated

Written by SUSAN COOK

If you could go back in time, where would you go? What would you do? Maybe try your luck at a roulette table in New Orleans in the late 1800s? Or dance to the latest hits of the 40s or 50s pulsing from the glowing jukebox in the corner of a local bar, cafe, or soda fountain?

Until they invent time travel, here's the next best thing to satisfy the need for nostalgia: History Incorporated, where what one person might consider junk is definitely another man's treasure.

Tucked away in downtown Leeds, History Incorporated's showroom and warehouse are brimming with historical gems hiding in plain sight. If you're starting to think this is just another antiques or memorabilia store to add to Alabama's ever-growing list, think again. It's not often you get to see this much history in one place.

As I entered the showroom, my eyes spotted a Red Baron carnival ride airplane from the 1940s dangling above two WWII-era classic coin-operated shooting games, Skyfighter and Ace Bomber. A shoe advertisement display (in the actual form of a shoe) squeaked up and down, surrounded by an array of vintage gas pumps, jukeboxes, and even a couple of motorcycles. A 1908 dealership poster for Peugeot hung over two leather chairs sourced from the Pennsylvania Library of Congress, and leaning against the wall was a set of early 1900s iron elevator doors from New Orleans.

My eyes eventually settled on the immaculately restored Nickelodeon player piano adorned with inlaid blue and gold stained glass. I had heard of them but never seen one in action until Billy Weller, owner and manager of History Incorporated, sprung it into life. Lively music filled the showroom as the keys merrily moved up and down as if a cheerful ghost had decided to tinkle the ivories. As we moved into the warehouse, the music lingered in the background, reminding me of bygone eras where entertainment was simply a coin drop away.

Crowding the narrow aisles of the warehouse was a head-high maze of history. In this cavernous room, the decades and centuries collide. It might look like a junky mess to some, but Weller, a resident of Logan Martin Lake who is equal parts collector, librarian, and historian, has the complete inventory filed away in his head. Although Polar Bear Services (heating, air conditioning, and ice makers) is Weller's primary business, History Incorporated is what he calls "the fun stuff."

"So many people think of this stuff as junk and throw it out," he says, "but there's a surge of adrenaline when you discover something. It's like finding treasure. You grow attached."

But Weller has one confession to make when it comes to this business.

"To do this, you have to be part hoarder," he admits with a quick grin. "You have to have at least a little bit of organized hoarding in you to keep every little thing, because parts for these machines are hard to find. Take for example a jukebox that isn't ideal for resell or restoration. We 'part' it out in order to make 10 more jukeboxes functional."

Speaking of jukeboxes, History Incorporated has a wide variety, ranging from one of the first jukeboxes made in 1929 by the less well-known brand of Holcomb & Hoke to the more jazzed up versions crafted by the king of jukeboxes, Wurlitzer.

Weller's favorite? "Anything from the 40s, but my favorite jukebox is a Wurlitzer 1080. To me, that's the sexiest jukebox. It was called the Mae West because of its curves. How can you not love that?"

One key way to tell a 1940s jukebox from those of other decades is by looking for the rounded plastic sides, called catalins, that glow like jewels when the jukebox comes alive. Since it's illegal to make the catalin plastic anymore due to the toxic fumes produced, finding pristine catalins is an thrill.

Sometimes there's even a treasure within the treasure.

Weller related a story about a Wurlitzer Victory he was restoring. "I took it apart and found silver coins in it from the 30s and 40s plus subway tokens from the 50s. And just think about this 80-year-old jukebox here. Who's played it? How many G.I.s danced with their wives or girlfriends in some little honky tonk somewhere? They get a second life."

But it's not just jukeboxes that are in high demand these days. According to Weller, "pinballs, gas pumps, and signs are through the roof. Pinballs bring in around $7-10,000, and a gasoline pump from the 1920s-30s era sold in 10 minutes to a guy in Louisiana."

The entire time we're talking, Weller's phone pings in the background, abuzz with potential buyers from here in the States and all over the world. Last month, a jukebox and six pinball machines made the journey to Hungary, while another shipment was headed to the Netherlands. Facebook and Instagram have helped to turn History Incorporated into a thriving 24/7 business.

Facebook? Seven seconds.

"Everything we list here is functional, but you may need to replace a button or make some other small replacement. We even sell it with the dust still on it," says Weller with a laugh, "so you're getting every bit of history. Anything that's electromechanical doesn't like to be sitting. It wants to be used and played."

Looking around at these time capsules of the past, I find it hard not to consider each one as some living thing. Luckily, Weller and his family-owned and operated History Incorporated are here to breathe new life into them. With their help, old Fortune Tellers have a few more fortunes to tell, pinball wizards can play the games of their grandfathers, and Wurlitzer jukeboxes still bubble to life.

What's old is new, and so the cycle repeats.

Pell City singer shares story of survival, releases new single this month

“Eastbound and down, loaded up and truckin’...”

Written by FAITH DORN

Photographs provided by Berritt Haynes

When Berritt Haynes turned 17, he underwent open heart surgery due to his hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, or “sudden death disease.” He was diagnosed with cardiomyopathy at age 8, following a sports physical.

“Four days before my surgery, my grandpa passed away,” he recalls. “We were best friends.”

Two years later, Haynes says he could feel the presence of his grandfather beside him throughout his time as a contestant on NBC’s The Voice last autumn. He dedicated the last song he sang on the show to his grandfather.

“I could feel him right there with me. He drove an 18-wheeler for a living, and he would always say, ‘Keep on trucking.’ He wasn’t much of a singer, but he would always sing ‘Eastbound and Down,’” the Pell City singer said.

“We’re gonna do what they say can’t be done...”

The cardiologist performed different tests on Haynes and told him he would have to stop playing sports.

“I loved playing sports. I was devastated,” he said.

His parents signed him up for guitar lessons. He also grew up singing in church.

"I didn't really get into guitar until I was 13. As I got older, I would play and practice more," Haynes said, "When I turned 14, I had a defibrillator placed in the lower part of my left shoulder. It really has only had to pace one time."

Ten days after the defibrillator surgery, he tried out for The Voice in Nashville but did not make it through. He was devastated, but Haynes' mom reminded him that so many people want to pursue music as a career. She told him to go back to school and start studying.

A couple years went by, Haynes sent a video tryout, and that did not work. He thought he might try out for another show.

"I tried out for American Idol when I was 16 or 17, and I didn't make it through. I was about ready to call it quits."

Haynes received a wish from The Make-A-Wish Foundation due to his heart disease, and he chose to fly out to California to meet the judges on The Voice. Unfortunately, the pandemic prevented the trip. Disappointed about missing his trip, Haynes picked another wish—improvements on his truck.

"We've got a long way to go and a short time to get there..."

When Haynes was 18, he had what he considered a very good cut of the song, "Tears In Heaven."

"My mom submitted it to The Voice without telling me," he recalled with a chuckle, "and after some interviews, I got a call back."

He had to wait for two weeks to see if he was going to get a blind audition. He performed "Mercy" by Brett Young when he did. That performance earned Haynes a spot as a member of Team Blake, led by country music superstar Blake Shelton.

Haynes chose that song because he feels it really relates to his story.

"I felt like God had not shown mercy by giving me this heart disease, and I thought I could never do anything, but He proved me otherwise," he said. "There's a line that goes 'Why you wanna stop this flame if it's still burning because it is still burning?' Why would God want to stop me playing sports when I was just getting good?"

Haynes says that working with

Blake Shelton is exactly how you would imagine it.

"Blake is a cool guy. He is very down to earth—exactly the same way as he is on television. He is very friendly."

The best advice Shelton gave Haynes was to be comfortable when performing. "He told me that I just have to sing to the people like you're singing to yourself in the mirror. Don't let anyone intimidate you. You're the one on stage singing; they're not."

In his time on the show, he got to meet other talented artists such as Kelly Clarkson, John Legend, Ariana Grande, Ed Sheeran and Dierks Bentley.

Haynes also enjoyed meeting all the other competitors. "I made so many lifelong friends that live all over the world. We would get together and sing."

"I'm Eastbound—just watch ol' Bandit run..."

Haynes says that he could not have found a better time in his life to be on the show.

"I said on the show a lot that dreams do come true. No matter what you go through in your life, there is always a way you can fulfill your dream. I know at times still even I start thinking, 'Is this ever gonna happen for me?' Keep trusting the Lord. He knows the plans for your life."

So far, for Haynes those plans include continuing to pursue music as a career. "Hopefully one day a record label sees fit to sign me. I'm not giving up until I have to—or I just don't."

Haynes cites John Mayer, Chris Stapleton, The Lumineers and Dave Barnes, who wrote "God Gave Me You," which Blake Shelton made famous, as influences.

"I am still on the verge of trying to figure out how I want my style to be.

My new single is indie-folk, but some may say it is country. I have a Southern accent, but I'm not Southern when I sing," he said.

Haynes' new single, "Sidewalks of Birmingham," written by Jerry Wolfe, was scheduled for release on all streaming platforms on January 5.

"You could relate to 'Sidewalks of Birmingham' in a lot of ways, but the way I relate to it is feeling this void in your life—like the cracks in the sidewalks of Birmingham. Sometimes you see a flower growing through the sidewalk and wonder how that could have happened," he said.

Haynes has a few more songs he plans to release and some he still needs to write. He will open for Travis Denning at concert this month, but he didn't have the exact date yet at the time of this interview.

Sunset over Logan Martin: A heart-melding experience

Even in winter, sundown is a special time on the lake

Written by
SARAH ELIZABETH MOREMAN

BOB CRISP

Pulling the stray strands that escaped my hastily braided hair from draping across my face, I squint at the sun still stubbornly bright, stealthily making its way to hide from the water. The reflective path of molten golds and oranges tantalizingly touches the tip of the pontoon in which I sit with my cousins.

Earlier, we were at the lake house, watching some sports and trying some new recipes to create mouth-watering dishes, not realizing that the day was almost over. Someone suggested taking a ride out on the water to watch the sun set. Noting the angle of the sun spurred us to hurry down the stone path to the dock. Soft music started playing, blending with the revving of the motor and churning of waters, as my cousin steered the boat away from the dock and towards the sharp orb of gold now hovering over the treetops, telling us to hurry.

Another cousin passes around a bag of chips with the bowl filled with some kind of spicy cheesy spinach dip that we concocted back at the lake house. I take several bites before passing the food along before taking sips of warm liquid from my thermos. Even though the sky warms our sensations with bold golds, gradient oranges, and soft reds, our breaths mist in the cold air.

The dichotomy between the warm scenery and the cold touch of nature encourages us to absorb the moment and not say anything to pierce the wonder. Rather, we silently take in the sounds of soft melodies, rhythmic pats of water against the sides of the pontoon, and warbles of avian life as our eyes feast upon the golden brilliance. Ripples on the water shatter the golden colors, adding prismatic beauty to the surrealistic painting of brilliance slowly releasing us into the waiting arms of night.

Instinctively knowing how quickly the sun slips behind the dark fortress of thick trees, I try not to blink while holding my breath. I watch the top part of molten gold orb peeking at us and flirting with us with its skirt of orange-tinted rays for a few minutes before slipping out of my sight. As one cannot hide light under a bushel, the radiance from the sunset pulls at the clouds, transforming them from their soft pillowy redness into modern abstract art forms reflecting the sharp molten gold color of the already-departed sun.

The golden clouds are easier on my eyes as I wish I could get close to them, to touch them to see if they feel or even taste like amber-colored crystal rock candy. Sipping more of the warm liquid in the thermos, the taste of the spiced cider complements with what my eyes are experiencing. Such a nice dichotomy, I ponder as I let out a sigh. My cousins look away from the majesty of the skies to see the expression of peace on my face.

"How is the cider?" one asks.
I smilingly nod as I respond,

"Good. It's almost gone."

Hearing the purr of the motor as my other cousin starts maneuvering the boat around, I shift in my seat to look back at the gradually darkening colors of the sunset. Others' voices slowly increase into a soothing cacophony when the music is turned off and the whoosh of the waters surround us as we make our way back to the lake house with its lights beckoning us to continue our togetherness.

Going from seeing the sun showing off its majesty glory to the beckoning lights of the lake house, I cannot help but be aware of how watching the sunset over the lake with my cousins has given me this sense of belonging even though we did not talk. I treasure how we watched the sun setting, the molten golds and oranges reflecting on the water, melding our hearts closer together.

LOGAN MARTIN RUMBLE

brings professional matches to lakeside area

Written by TYLER WALDREP

Photographed by TUCKER WEBB

Nicholas "Baby Boy" Adams didn't walk into the boxing ring. He floated.

At least that's what it felt like to the 26-year-old Pell City native when he heard the crowd cheering him on in the third-ever Logan Martin Rumble.

"Everybody there screaming and the energy, it was things that I didn't realize I missed so much until I got out of high school," Adams said. "But doing that back in my hometown, it feels like I'm 15, 16, running back onto a football field. It is unexplainable."

Adams knocked out his opponent, Joshua Cox, roughly two minutes into the opening round with a left-handed shot to the head followed by a flurry of body shots for good measure. It was a victory even more impressive than his debut in the Logan Martin Rumble II back in July.

One One Six Boxing Promotions owner Brandi McCain said Adam's involvement is "key to success. The support in St. Clair County, it just blows me away.”

With a local face for the home crowd to support, McCain said she hopes to continue to host the Logan Martin Rumble twice a year in Pell City. She has already planned the fourth event for July 9, 2022.

McCain said she sold 375 tickets to the third edition of the rumble, despite competing with a highly-anticipated showdown between Alabama and Georgia in the SEC Championship.

“In the professional boxing world, if you can make 300 guests, you’ve met your quota, and the bills are paid as we say,” McCain said. “But the last Pell City show (in July), there were 618 there, so as you can tell, the ball game took it down a little bit.”

McCain said she expects the crowd size for the next Logan Martin Rumble to match or even exceed the crowd from last summer.

That support from Pell City and other St. Clair County residents and businesses has not gone unnoticed by McCain, who is herself a Ragland graduate.

It's one of the main reasons McCain keeps coming back to the lakeside community, even though she is currently juggling, on average, six-plus events a year in the two years she has been working as a promoter.

The success of those events is evident not only in the tickets she's sold but in the four fighters, including Adams, whom she currently manages.

"Nick is the total package," McCain said. "Not skill-wise in the ring, but he's got the family support, the gym support, he's got a great coach, he's got a great personality. He knows the business, and yes, he is good in the ring, but he's still new."

Adams himself couldn't agree more with that last point. He originally started training to be an MMA fighter roughly a year ago but found his way to boxing after his gym closed down and his promoter disappeared.

What seemed like a setback to the long-time UFC fan actually turned out to be a blessing in disguise since it led him to McCain and One One Six Boxing.

“There is something about that sweet science of dodging something by a millimeter that almost knocked you out cold,” Adams said. “There’s things like that I am picking up on, and I fell in love with boxing.”

As a young boxer, Adams said there are times he battles doubts, but the love and support of friends and family help him push those to the side when it’s time to touch gloves.

With his continued success, Adams will be forced to prove himself on the road soon, perhaps even in 2022, but the Pell City native said he will always jump at the chance to fight in the Logan Martin Rumble.

“It is like that famous saying, the home is where the heart is,” Adams said. “That is the biggest thing out there. My heart went to pounding. You do have the butterflies and stuff in your stomach, but it is just an entire town right there that you’re kind of the star of the town that night.”

Given the opportunity, humans will celebrate anything.

Take Groundhog Day. Since 1887, every February in Pennsylvania, thousands gather to catch a glimpse of Punxsutawney Phil to see if he'll glimpse his own shadow.

A less well-known but no less peculiar weather forecaster is the Woolly Worm of Banner Elk, North Carolina. Since 1978, the 13 segments of this fuzzy caterpillar have been analyzed every October at the Woolly Worm Festival. Each segment supposedly corresponds to the 13 weeks of winter, with more black fuzz meaning more winter and more brown fuzz forecasting less cold and snow. A race along 3 feet of string determines which lucky caterpillar will win the honors. Dale Wormhardt and Patsy Climb were two notable winners in years past.

In Freer, Texas, there's the Rattlesnake Roundup festival, while in Clute, Texas, they devote three days in July to their annual Mosquito Festival. GeckoFest in Gulfport, Florida, brings in thousands of visitors each September, or you can attend Bugfest in Raleigh, North Carolina, featuring a flea circus and roach races, all while sampling a Buggy Bean Dip or Three Bug Salad.

I think I'll pass.

A less nightmare-inducing festival held each May in Brevard, North Carolina is The White Squirrel Festival. For three days, the town celebrates its locally famous snow-white squirrels believed to be the descendants of a lucky pair who escaped a carnival truck that overturned in 1949.

The white squirrels of Brevard have yet to confirm this origin story. Meanwhile, Olney, Illinois; Marionville, Missouri; Kenton, Tennessee; and Exeter, Ontario also claim to be the official home of the legendary white squirrel.

But there may be a new contender to add to the elite Home of the White Squirrel list. Not to be outdone, Logan Martin Lake can also now lay claim to white squirrel sightings, as these furry frost-white creatures have been photographed frolicking about at Sundance Marina. They're not albino squirrels, although it's easy to make that mistake. The key is to look at their eyes. Like some rabbits, albino squirrels have red or pink eyes due to a complete lack of melanin, while genetically white squirrels have dark eyes since they are simply a rare morph of the eastern grey squirrel.

Although Logan Martin might not be quite ready for its own white squirrel festival, spotting one is supposed to bring you good luck, symbolizing a change on the horizon. But maybe humans simply have a tendency to look for luck and excitement in the rare and never-before-seen.

We all welcome a break from the average day-to-day, even if it means looking to a groundhog to predict the weather, celebrating a snake, dressing up like a gecko, or mimicking a mosquito. Sometimes we need to shake things up by sampling a new food (or bug, as the case may be). Or, simply find a moment to walk by the lake and remember that something as small as seeing a white squirrel is still something to celebrate.

Talladega couple finds the perfect home on the shores of Logan Martin

Written by FAITH DORN

Billy and Leslie Weller live on the Talladega side of Logan Martin Lake. The couple moved to Pell City to be closer to their children.

"We talked about moving to Smith Lake, but that was too far from our kids, so we chose Logan Martin," Leslie said.

The Wellers knew exactly what they wanted in a lake house, and they found it here.

Their two-level open concept house features five bedrooms, five and a half bathrooms, a detached garage, and 200 square feet of shoreline. The family owns two boats and a jet ski.

"If there is magic on this planet, it is contained in water."

– Loren Eiseley, "The Immense Journey"

"We had a checklist for what we wanted in a lake home, and when we saw it, it was like the stars aligned," Billy Weller said, "Other than a few things we needed to do, this house was perfect for us."

One of the factors that makes this home perfect for the Wellers is the incredible view.

"Our favorite time to enjoy the view is in the morning. We wake up early to see the sun rise. We will go out on our deck and watch the wildlife and people enjoying the lake on their boats," said Leslie.

The amazing view is also a hit with family and friends. The Wellers enjoy grilling and entertaining visitors on their back deck.

"The back deck is very large—almost the length of the whole house. When we celebrate events for the holidays or birthdays, we go all out," Leslie said.

Inside the house, the tones are neutral and trendy. The walls are gray but darker in the

“The style is simple, traditional and somewhat elegant,” said Leslie.

In December, the Wellers had a “fun” Christmas tree in the kitchen and another in the den by the fireplace. The tree in the den featured traditional red, green, and gold ornaments.

"When they closed borders down, that hurt History Incorporated's backlog. But people aren't gonna sit in a 95 degree house," he said.

At the time of this interview, the Wellers were preparing to load two containers with items from History Incorporated for delivery to the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

The couple's love of antiques is reflected in multiple areas of their home.

Written by VALLEAN JACKSON
Photographed by BOB CRISP

Prospective buyers looking for a modern lakefront home on Logan Martin Lake will want to see the property at 1458 Rivercrest Drive in Vincent.

The single-family home, constructed in 2000 and situated on slightly more than an acre, has six bedrooms and four bathrooms within its 4,321-square-foot interior.

It has an open floor plan with wood flooring in the living room, dining room, and kitchen. The living area has floor-to-ceiling double windows that invite plenty of natural light, a built-in fireplace, and a ceiling fan.

The kitchen has ample white cabinets that are great for storage, granite countertops, gray tiled backsplash, unique light fixtures, and a large connected granite breakfast bar. The built-in stainless steel appliances include a double-door refrigerator, stove, microwave, dishwasher, and an electric stove top.

A distinctive feature about this home is the 1,961-square-foot finished basement. It has carpet throughout, a coved ceiling with recessed lights, a ceiling fan, fireplace, floor-to-ceiling double windows, a den, two rooms that could be used for an additional bedroom or office, bathroom, and a side door for entry.

Exterior amenities include vinyl siding, a screened patio, private boat launch, pier, detached two-car garage, two-car garage on the main level, sunroom, and a wrap-around driveway.

The property lists at $798,000. For more information, call Nicole Anderson of Lake Homes Realty at 205-753-0225.

'I am very thankful for those who choose me,' lakeside area real estate agent says

Tracy Sargent is a former elementary school teacher who left the classroom to pursue real estate, trading one love for another.

"I have always had an interest in the real estate industry, but it took me some time to get to this point," she said. "I have a degree in elementary education and taught upper elementary from the grades of 4-6 for 10 years. I loved teaching but I could not be more happier in my decision to work in real estate. I truly love what I do."

The ERA King agent has been in real estate since 2018 and believes that her dedication and concern for her clients are what make her successful, adding that she is there to take the pressure off of her clients. Whether helping a buyer or seller, she believes in giving her best.

"I am very thankful for those who choose me as agent," she said. "If I had to choose which client was my favorite experience, I couldn't because they are all my favorite, honestly. I have worked with so many great people and made so many friends along the way. That's why I love real estate. Meeting new people, conquering the challenge of finding that perfect house, getting houses together to be sold, and the satisfaction of bringing clients through the house buying process are all the reasons I love what I do. I truly find joy in helping others and making a difference in their lives."

When it comes to prospective home buyers, Sargent advises not worrying about finding the perfect home, for it will come at the right time.

"It is important to not feel under pressure to choose a home. Feeling pressured could lead to rushing and buying a home that could leave you unhappy. Enjoy the process. Also, be sure to get home inspections done as they help buyers know what they are buying, give peace of mind, and create more confidence in the purchase."

Home inspections, she says, should be done within a week or 10 days of the contract. The inspection can also help to determine if buyers should go ahead with the contract or not. "It is always good to be as knowledgeable as possible when investing in such a large decision."

Sargent, a native of Pell City, is married and has two sons. When she is not working with her clients, she loves spending time with her family and traveling.
