'Penny Dreadful' Returns with New Torments

Dan Rice
FYI Television, Inc.

One of last year's most exciting new series, the chilling horror series "Penny Dreadful" returns with new evil for its clever collection of characters to face when season two premieres, Sunday at 9 p.m. on Showtime. Named for the notoriously cheap and sensational serial fiction of Britain in the 19th century, the drama enlists figures from classical literature of the period, including the title character of Oscar Wilde's "The Picture of Dorian Gray," Dr. Victor Frankenstein and his patchwork creation from Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley's "Frankenstein," and Abraham Van Helsing and Mina Harker from Bram Stoker's "Dracula."

In the first season of "Penny Dreadful," the callous explorer Sir Malcolm Murray (Timothy Dalton) and the psychically empowered Vanessa Ives (Eva Green) enlisted American sharpshooter Ethan Chandler (Josh Hartnett) in their mission against a nest of nasty vampires, an ordeal from which each emerged with cracks in their hardened exteriors. But while Vanessa has grown closer to Ethan, it seems the great suffering she endured in season one was only the beginning. Now she is being targeted by the seductive spiritualist Evelyn Poole (Helen McCrory) — aka Madame Kali — who assaults Vanessa with a barrage of disturbing occult images, as her powerful daughter, Hecate (Sarah Greene), stands ready to take the attack in more fiendish directions.

"I was planning this season 10 years ago and thinking about these characters," explains creator John Logan (the screenwriter of "Skyfall" and James Bond's next outing, "Spectre"), "and I became fascinated with a particular part of Vanessa Ives' past where she learned to read the tarot, because it's not something that a girl, even one as unique as Vanessa, knows how to do. And that led me into the world of the occult and the supernatural. And this season we embrace witchcraft. So, I created the character Evelyn Poole, and she becomes the antagonist for not only Vanessa but all the characters. Last season we set the players on the board, and now we get to play with them in interesting ways. Characters meet who have never met, hidden things are revealed, mostly because of the pressure that's on them. Evelyn Poole becomes an actual antagonist who can speak. Last season we had the vampires, brooding and silent creatures, and now we have a proper villain, and we enjoy her immensely.

"One of the great pleasures of doing a second season is I was able to turn to Jonathan McKinstry, our art director, and say, 'Evelyn Poole's going to have a mansion, and it's a witch's lair, but no one goes inside it unless they know what she is or they're quickly going to discover it. The propriety of Victorian architecture doesn't apply, so go mad.' Walking around that stage is very disorienting because it's intentionally built to be a bending, confusing, frightening place, and if you're on the second floor of the two story set, you can get lost, so hopefully the audience will feel a little bit of that disquiet that we understand so well."

Another storyline of "Penny Dreadful" this season is that of Frankenstein being pressured by his monster (Rory Kinnear) to bring his intended bride, Brona Croft (Billie Piper), back to life. This simple and relatable desire for companionship lends pathos to The Creature, whose terrifying image is, after all, largely objective while reflecting the alienation of the period.

"It's about being divorced from yourself and trying to figure out where you belong in a society," Logan notes. "And England in 1891 was on the cusp of new era. Everything from electrical lighting to everything Dr. Frankenstein explores to vivisection to the religion being established. The agrarian economy was an industrial economy and a whole workforce was out of work. People were disquieted. They were alienated. They didn't know what the future was going to bring, and those great writers — the H.G. Wells, the Bram Stokers — were able to take that and transform it into literal representations of that anxiety and also that hope, because I think, to me, what I always come back to for 'Penny Dreadful,' surprisingly, given the inherent darkness of the show, is that these people are aspiring. They live in dark rooms, but they are trying to find the light in some desperate way."

After laying his daughter to rest, Sir Malcolm (Timothy Dalton) has a new horror to contend with on season two of "Penny Dreadful," premiering Sunday at 9 p.m. on Showtime.

"Well, it's the idea, isn't it," McCrory adds, "that Shelley talks about in 'Frankenstein,' that the monster is not what he creates but actually what mankind makes the creature to be when they reject him for being ugly. And it is society that brutalizes, which is one interpretation of what makes a monster is everybody around that person. And in this, I think what's interesting is that in John's writing,

I think that's almost true of all your monsters, that they all have a vulnerability and a need to be accepted by those around [them]."

By revisiting these classic horror characters in more sympathetic terms than their usual feature film depictions, "Penny Dreadful" weaves deeper hues into their shared tapestry, while allowing viewers to experience more than mere fright and suspense. And there remains a wealth of possibilities for future storylines, should the drama continue.

Politics in Entertainment

1. Running for seven seasons, this acclaimed NBC drama is set in the White House offices of the president and his senior staff.
2. Also set primarily in the White House, this HBO comedy seemingly needs a title change in light of last season's resignation of the president.
3. On this current CBS drama, the president takes a back seat to a member of his cabinet, a former CIA analyst.
4. A working former CIA analyst is followed on this NBC espionage thriller, as she assembles and presents the

- President's Daily Briefing on vital security issues.
5. On this ABC political thriller, a former White House Communications Director (and presidential mistress) launches her own crisis management firm.

Laugh Along w/ LateNight

- David Letterman
 Supermodel Giselle Bundchen is retiring from modeling. You know why? Because she says her body told her to stop. I think that's pretty insightful. I'm retiring because EVERYBODY told me to stop.
- Hillary Clinton is campaigning in Iowa, virtually going door to door to every home in Iowa. Jehovah's Witnesses finally got fed up and said, "Get lost. Get out of here!"
- Jimmy Kimmel
 For the next hour, would you say you are relying on me to host the show? So, in a way you are depending on me? I can claim you as dependents. It makes for a big tax refund for me.
- The IRS specifically selected April 15 as Tax Day. They knew it was going to likely be a beautiful spring day and they wanted to ruin it for us.
- Conan O'Brien
 Hillary Clinton is making income inequality a central theme in her campaign. Yeah, for example, today she pointed out that her husband to get by on $200 million a year, and that's not fair.

A Wisconsin woman recently got a high school diploma at the age of 103 and says she is now considering going to college. Friends are recommending a two-year college.

Moments in Time

On May 5, 1877, nearly a year after the Battle of the Little Big Horn, Sitting Bull and a band of followers cross into Canada hoping to find safe haven from the U.S. Army. By early 1881, Sitting Bull was the chief of only a small band of mostly older and sick people, and he finally agreed to move 187 Indians to the United States, where they were assigned to the Standing Rock reservation in South Dakota.

On May 10, 1909, "Mother" Maybelle Carter is born near Nickelsville, Virginia. From the late 1920s all the way through the 1950s, she was a familiar presence on radio and a powerful influence on the course of country music. She helped make the Carters the "First Family of Country Music" and introduced songs like "Wildwood Flower" and "Can the Circle Be Unbroken."

On May 6, 1937, the airship Hindenburg, the largest dirigible ever built, bursts into flames upon touching its mooring mast in New Jersey, killing 36 passengers and crewmembers aboard the hydrogen-filled blimp. The "zeppelin" flew at a speed of 6 mph, propelled by a three-horsepower steam engine.

On May 9, 1950, L. Ron Hubbard publishes "Dianetics: The Modern Science of Mental Health." With this book, Hubbard introduced a branch of self-help psychology called Dianetics, which morphed into a belief system now known as Scientology.

On May 8, 1972, President Richard Nixon announces that he has ordered the mining of major North Vietnamese ports to prevent the flow of arms and material to the communist forces that had invaded South Vietnam in March.

On May 4, 1984, New Jersey rocker Bruce Springsteen releases "Pink Cadillac" as a B-side to "Dancing in the Dark," which will become the first and biggest hit single off "Born in the U.S.A."
