10 tips for Families

1. Begin the conversation early, long before the need for a transition is immediate.
2. Know what signs to look for in your loved one(s) that may indicate there is a need. These include, but are not limited to: Memory loss, lack of interest in the usual daily activities such as social events, or cooking, poor hygiene, sudden weight loss and falls.
3. Find out if there is a Health Care Power of Attorney in place and/or activated.
4. If you are looking on behalf of a loved one, it's sometimes best to start your search independently. Once you have narrowed your search to 2-3 communities get your loved one(s) involved in the decision making process.
5. First impressions are everything. When you walk into a community, is it welcoming? Make note of the lighting, sounds and smells. Are there people around engaging in conversation and/or activities?
6. Does the community contract with public funding?
7. Inquire about the staff to resident ratio.
8. How are the meals prepared and provided? Ask to see a menu.
9. What cares are staff trained to perform? (i.e. personal, medications, transfers) This varies from community to community.
10. Ask about Life Enrichment opportunities. Ask to see an activities schedule.
