YOUR ROLE IN AN EMERGENCY SITUATION

If you're first on the scene of an injury or serious illness, you may be the only link between the victim and emergency care. Your role is to take action, whether by providing first aid, seeking medical help, or calling emergency medical services (EMS). Your actions may improve a victim's chance of recovery.

TAKE ACTION

To help, you must take action. If you can provide first aid, do so. Don't let fear of legal consequences keep you from saving a life. Most states have Good Samaritan laws to protect people who help in an emergency. If you're not able to offer first aid, contact EMS. Do it yourself. Don't assume someone else will.

SEEK MEDICAL HELP

In many cases, first aid is only the first step. People who've been injured or fallen ill often need professional medical help. Seek medical help that same day, unless life or limb is threatened. In these situations, CALL 911 - Contact EMS immediately if you're not able to offer first aid or if life or limb is threatened. In most parts of the country, calling 911 will connect you with an emergency services dispatcher. Call zero (0) if 911 service is not available in your area. The telephone operator can connect you with the local fire and police departments and ambulance service.

Be ready to tell the dispatcher the following information:

- Where you are
- What happened
- The number of victims
- The condition of each victim
- Any first aid being provided
