AMERICA, ALLIES INVADE NORMANDY

WWII's D-Day among history's most important military operations

CNHI News

The Allies' D-Day invasion of Normandy, France, on June 6, 1944, has been captured and recreated by historians and filmmakers and taught by teachers around the world.

Operation Overlord, a planned assault across the English Channel on German forces, was first discussed by U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill almost immediately after the Nazis captured France in 1940.

By May 1944, hundreds of thousands of Allied troops from the U.S., the U.K., France, Canada and other nations were amassed in Southern England and trained for the complicated amphibious assault.

An estimated 10,000 Allies were killed — including 6,000 Americans — but at day's end the operation was a military success. Eighty square miles of the French coast was controlled by 155,000 troops.

The Allies now had a stronghold in Europe. Germany surrendered less than a year later.

This photograph shows General Dwight D. Eisenhower giving the order of the day — "Full victory-nothing else" — to paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division in England. Eisenhower visited them on the eve of the Normandy invasion, moments before they boarded airplanes to participate in the first assault of occupied France on D-Day. The paratrooper with the number 23 around his neck, 1st Lt. Wallace Strobel, recalled that the two discussed fishing.

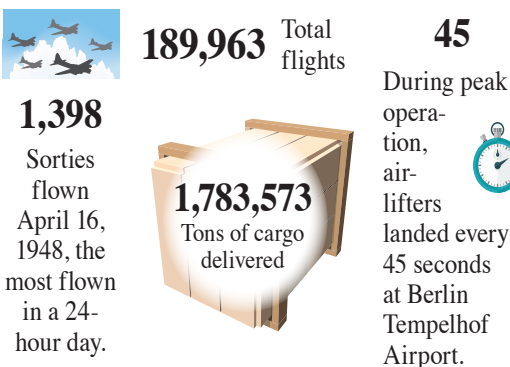

BY THE NUMBERS: BERLIN AIRLIFT

A Soviet Union blockade of Berlin — an attempt to humiliate Western powers helping Germany rebuild after World War II — led to a mission that set the groundwork for future humanitarian airlifts, according to U.S. Air Forces in Europe — Air Forces Africa.

After the blockade started on June 24, 1948, the newly independent U.S. Air Force proved it could airlift supplies into Berlin with test flights. Two days later, U.S. and British planes began the Berlin Airlift. It was the first major test of resolve during the Cold War. Here are some of the numbers representing the U.S. Air Force's workload during the 15-month mission it named Operation Vittles:

COMMITTEE OF FIVE

Virginia delegate Richard Henry Lee introduced a resolution officially declaring the 13 colonies independent from Britain on June 7, 1776.

Four days later, on June 11, with the writing on the wall that Congress would adopt the resolution, the governing body chose a committee of five to draft the official Declaration of Independence, a statement to the world.

John Adams of Massachusetts and Roger Sherman of Connecticut, two New England men; Benjamin Franklin of Pennsylvania and Robert R. Livingston of New York, two men from the middle colonies; and Thomas Jefferson of Virginia, one southerner, made up the committee.

According to Jefferson, members of the committee "unanimously pressed" him to draft the document. He gave his final draft to Franklin and Adams requesting their corrections before presenting it to the full committee, who sent the unaltered copy to Congress.

Jefferson's rough draft, with changes made by Franklin and Adams, as well as Jefferson's own notes of changes by the Congress, is housed at the Library of Congress.

On July 2, 1776, a day after reconvening, 12 of 13 colonies (New York did not vote) in Congress adopted the Lee Resolution for independence and began to consider the Declaration.

Congress' discussion led to some alterations and deletions, but the core of the document remained Jefferson's

The revision process continued through all of July 3 and into the morning of July 4 when it was officially adopted.
