‘Last Week Tonight’ is a perfect blend of news and humor

By Kenneth Andeel
TV Media

John Oliver as seen in “Last Week Tonight with John Oliver”

When John Oliver accepted correspondent duties at “The Daily Show” as a fresh-faced British youngster in 2006, he could not have dreamed that he would eventually adapt and perfect that show’s formula to create a series that would ultimately eclipse its progenitor.

That’s exactly what he’s done with “Last Week Tonight with John Oliver” — he has inherited the cable comedy news throne that was once occupied by Jon Stewart and “The Daily Show.” Oliver’s version of the late-night comedy news genre heads into its sixth season on Sunday, Feb. 17, when its milestone 150th episode airs on HBO.

“Last Week Tonight” follows in the footsteps of “The Daily Show,” exposing the absurdity of traditional news media, the 24-hour news cycle, and both niche political factions and the political elite, while avoiding cheap-shot accusations through diligent research and a fundamentally journalistic approach.

Oliver got his first serious taste of hosting duties in 2013, when Stewart took a 12-week leave of absence to direct the film “Rosewater” (2014). Audiences were largely impressed with Oliver’s fill-in duties, and executives across the TV world raced to see who could land him as a headliner for their own news comedy show. HBO turned out to be the best fit, and a mere three months after his stint as temporary host, it was announced that Oliver would be creating a brand new show for the premium cable network.

In April 2014, “Last Week Tonight with John Oliver” premiered, and in the time since its debut, the show has become a cultural touchstone and a critical darling. It has also won multiple Emmy and Peabody awards for its humorous-yet-informative treatment of serious issues — most recently, the show took home the 2018 Emmy for Outstanding Variety Talk Series.

“Last Week Tonight” is especially notable for taking extra deep dives into serious issues. If “The Daily Show” was a satirical version of the archetypical nightly news broadcast, then “Last Week Tonight” is more like an off-kilter newsmagazine. It’s not uncommon for a segment on Oliver’s show to run between 15 and 20 minutes, which is a vast chunk of time for a half-hour show to dedicate to a single topic. Segments on a serious newsmagazine heavyweight such as “60 Minutes” tend to run between 11 and 13 minutes, and the fact that Oliver and his writers can outdo that is impressive.

From the very beginning, Oliver intended to set his show apart from similar series in a few specific ways. Rather than rushing through a number of diverse topics, he chose to produce longer, more in-depth segments about issues he and his writers felt strongly about. The fact that “Last Week Tonight” is a weekly show also influenced its tone and content. Oliver and his colleagues realized that by the time they got their Sunday night shot at the week’s news, it would have already gone through countless iterations in the traditional news media, and “Last Week Tonight” might be hard-pressed to come up with something unique.

Rather than being discouraged by that prospect, Oliver and his staff felt freed by it. It allowed them to scour the news landscape for underreported stories and identify niche subject matter that had been overlooked by traditional outlets. It also meant that when they did cover big news, they were able to offer a more comprehensive and considered take after several days of development, differing significantly from the reactionary coverage necessitated by the 24/7 late-breaking stories format peddled by other newsmongers.

Oliver’s influence has become so pervasive that people have coined the phrase “the John Oliver effect,” which refers to real-world policy decisions that are influenced by the show’s dedicated and very loud fanbase. There are a number of credible examples of this occurring: after Oliver ran a segment on net neutrality legislation and encouraged his viewers to send their disagreements to the Federal Communications Commission, the FCC’s servers received such a deluge of comments that they were overloaded. Similarly, after Oliver railed against the unfair and unjust bail system in New York, the state relaxed its bail requirements for people charged with nonviolent crimes. And after a widely watched segment skewered the corrupt leadership of FIFA, its longstanding president resigned in disgrace shortly thereafter.

Even when Oliver’s segments don’t result in specific changes, “Last Week Tonight” has an uncanny knack for becoming part of the cultural discourse. One of the show’s most recent bits — the “we got him” segment, which pointed out that President Trump never seems to pay a lasting political price, no matter how many fibs he’s caught in — became a ubiquitous internet meme in 2018. That segment, as well as other popular offerings, are almost sure to return when Season 6 of “Last Week Tonight” starts rolling.

Make sure to catch Oliver’s unique brand of satirical news-flavored comedy (or comedy-flavored news?) when “Last Week Tonight with John Oliver” returns for a sixth season on Sunday, Feb. 17, on HBO.

Ree Drummond mixes old favorites with new recipes

Ree Drummond hosts "The Pioneer Woman"

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

History is all around us, even in our food. So much of what we eat is rooted in the past, from classic pairings to traditional dishes only served on holidays. The stories behind them are part of what makes many foods so great, but, of course, that appreciation for history has to be tempered by our modern sensibilities and tastes.

You'd struggle to find anyone who appreciates that blend of old and new better than Food Network's "The Pioneer Woman" host Ree Drummond. The food writer has built her entire career out of combining her hip urban roots with her current rural ranch life, and in this week's episode, she brings the past and the present together to celebrate the history of her husband's family.

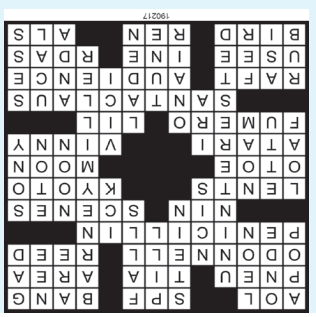

The Drummond family's historic home is a museum these days, and in the episode airing Saturday, Feb. 23, Ree decides to make a special meal for the museum's curator, Beverly. She digs out some recipes from the home's original owner, Addie Drummond, and throws in a few of her own modern dishes to make something that blends the historic Drummonds with the modern ones.

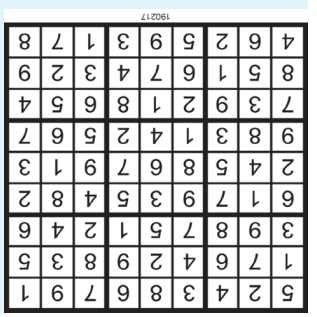

So what's on the menu for Beverly to enjoy? Well, there's an old-fashioned chicken stew served with freshly baked brown bread. To drink, Ree whips up a refreshing grape lemonade, and for dessert, a stunning raspberry cream cake is ready to be enjoyed.

Of course, "The Pioneer Woman" isn't only about the food — it's just as much about the host's life in rural Oklahoma. With their stomachs filled to bursting, Beverly takes Ree on a tour of the house, showing off its artifacts and treasures and sharing stories about what life would have been like on the ranch back in the olden days.

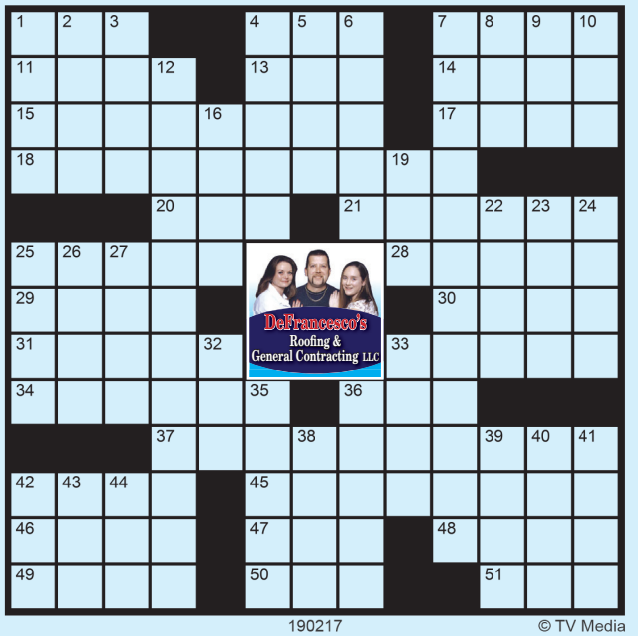

Of course, "The Pioneer Woman" is just one piece of the host's culinary and lifestyle kingdom. Drummond got her start as a blogger, sharing her experiences with ranch life and all that goes with it, and she's expanded her reach with cookbooks, children's books and, of course, her TV show.

"The Pioneer Woman" woman airs Saturday mornings on Food Network.

Hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: There are two different films entitled "The Island" — one is an action film with Michael Caine that came out in 1980, while the other is a more recent sci-fi one that came out in 2005. But it's always the sci-fi one I see in the television listings. Why is the Caine film seemingly never on TV anymore?

A: There are a couple of harsh realities that figure into your question. One is the harsh-for-filmmakers reality that you can't copyright a title, and the other is the harsh-for-Michael Caine reality that he isn't the bankable star he used to be.

Don't get me wrong, Caine is still a huge name, but the popular idea of him today is not as a leading man. In some ways he's a victim of his recent success — his role as Alfred in Christopher Nolan's Batman movies, and similar supporting gigs in hits like "Inception" (2010) and "Now You See Me" (2013), mean he's better known today as a wise guide than a death-defying charmer.

Meanwhile, the drawing power of the 2005 version's stars has only grown since it was made. Scarlett Johansson in particular has become one of the biggest names in cinema today, and co-star Ewan McGregor isn't far behind.

There's also what we can call a contextual problem to deal with. Yes, the new "Island" is a dystopian-future sci-fi thing, but its plot seems almost plausible compared to Caine's movie about pirate conspiracies and brainwashing set in the Bermuda Triangle. That sort of story fit nicely into turn-of-the-'80s cinema, but today it sounds a bit off the wall — they just don't make 'em like that anymore.

Confusing matters further (though not much), another film called "The Island" was released in 2006, though this was a Russian one that didn't get a lot of global traction.

The real issue here, as I said at the start, is that titles can't be copyrighted. This makes sense to some degree — titles need to be short and pithy, and there are only so many words to go around. "The Piece of Land Surrounded on All Sides by Water" just isn't as catchy.

Late laughs

Conan

We are back with a 30-minute show. I don't want you to worry about that — it may be only 30 minutes, but I assure you, it's going to FEEL like two hours.

The Tonight Show With Jimmy Fallon

Well you guys, it was just five degrees in New York City today. It was so cold, hot dog vendors were complaining about shrinkage.

Temperatures are below freezing all over the country. Up in Boston, two Patriots fans high-fived and their hands just shattered.

Throughout the country, people are dealing with freezing temperatures. All day long, New Yorkers struggled with how to give each other the finger while wearing mittens.

Nominations for the Academy Awards were announced early this morning by Tracee Ellis Ross and Kumail Nanjiani. So if you're keeping track, they found two people to wake up at 5 a.m. to read the nominations, but still no one to host the show.

I saw that Christian Bale was nominated for his role in "Vice," while Bradley Cooper and Sam Elliott were nominated for "A Star Is Born." They were actually all nominated in the same category: "Best Achievement in Growling."

I saw that during the game, CBS commentator Tony Romo was actually predicting what was going to happen before each play. Then every guy watching at home was like, "Oh sure, but when I do it, I'm ruining the Super Bowl party."

The Late Late Show With James Corden

Personally, I'm very excited about "The Favourite" getting all this recognition, because it means the United States might finally admit that the word "favorite" is supposed to have a "u" in it.

A lot of people were complaining on Twitter this morning about Bradley Cooper being snubbed for Best Director, which is an outrage, it really is. It means he's just going to have to settle for being Bradley Cooper.

More than 68,000 pounds of gluten-free chicken nuggets were recalled after customers found pieces of wood in them. Good news for anyone who's looking to get a little more fiber in their diet.

In Texas recently, a man was in the locker room after working out at a 24-Hour Fitness, when the gym closed and he suddenly found himself locked inside. So at best, they were a 23-Hour Fitness. On the plus side, having a panic attack while you're locked in a gym is great cardio.

An Italian restaurant chain is now offering a special dinner item for expectant couples: they're offering gender-reveal lasagnas. The cheese inside is dyed pink or blue for girls or boys. Congratulations, it's disgusting!

Amazon just made a big announcement: they're now launching a self-driving delivery robot named Scout. Amazon designed it to deliver packages directly to your doorstep. Now, I'm sorry, if there's a scout coming directly onto my family's property, she'd better be selling cookies.

A cow in Anchorage escaped from her pen during a rodeo, and has managed to evade capture for the last six months. Or, to put it another way: the world's longest rodeo has now been going on for six months.

Jimmy Kimmel Live

Ticket prices for seats at the Super Bowl are reportedly down they say, in part, because Rams fans don't want to go all the way to Atlanta to see the game. That makes sense. In L.A., it's hard to get anyone to drive 20 minutes to meet you for dinner.

Weekend Update With Colin Jost and Michael Che

The White House said that the charges against Roger Stone have nothing to do with President Trump. I mean, of course the White House said that, because the White House is the president. If I get accused of something, I can't be like, "Man, I'm innocent. Just ask my apartment."
