O f the largest universities in the world, the campus is a bustling place. People walking, running, eating, studying. But the most important thing that happens on this campus is the study of science. And that science is everywhere. Even in the classroom.

In 1857, Jefferson Davis, a Confederate President, owned nearly all of the land that is now the University of Texas at Austin. He was a slave owner and a general, and the first native-born Texan to hold that rank. The bridge was damaged by the 2016 flood. It is under re-
