A killer takes a bestselling book about crime theory a little too literally in "Instinct," a police procedural with a modern touch, premiering Sunday, March 18, on CBS. In order to solve his murders, Det. Lizzie Needham (Bojana Novakovic, "Shameless") will need the author's help. Watch as Dr. Dylan Reinhart (Alan Cumming, "The Good Wife"), a former CIA operative-turned-professor and author, joins Needham in order to create a profile and help catch the killer.

The write wit: Remixing police procedurals with 'Instinct'

By K.A. Taylor
TV Media

Police procedural dramas are a staple of North American television. Just mentioning the term, or the words "Law and Order," immediately transports you to the world of whodunnit (and that catchy theme song). Obsessed and fascinated as we are by the motives behind the deadliest of crimes, the success of this kind of series may seem like a given, but the odds of a show being a hit greatly increase when it includes just the right kind of twist. On Sunday, March 18, CBS introduces the world to a clever, subversive police procedural, when "Instinct" premieres.

Dylan Reinhart (Alan Cumming, "The Good Wife") is a quirky, highly intellectual professor and author, currently teaching abnormal behavior while trying to compose his next bestseller. Reinhart's inability to complete another stunning work of prose may be due to a lack of inspiration, as he's no longer able to draw on years of experience from his former life working as a CIA operative. That is, however, until a visit from the NYPD to his classroom coaxes him back into the thrill of investigative work.

Det. Lizzie Needham (Bojana Novakovic, "Shameless") informs Reinhart that his book has been implicated in a murder. The book, a bestseller on criminal theory, is being brought to life by a killer, with clues left behind taken directly from the pages of Reinhart's work. Without any motives or additional leads, Needham reaches out to Reinhart for his help, knowing that his unique perspective as author — and former CIA operative — is her best hope at stopping this mysterious murderer.

To better prepare himself for the chase, Reinhart calls on some old friends for assistance from his previous life, including Julian Cousins (Naveen Andrews, "Sense8"). Utilizing his pool of resources, Reinhart begins to create a profile of the killer, with a mix of fascination and determination to see justice served.

The popularity of police procedurals started long before the invention of the television, with novels birthing this intriguing subset of detective fiction. While the literary origins find their roots in the mid-1800s, the genre's popularity rapidly grew post-World War II, with many of the tales now unfolding on the big screen. Everything changed with "Dragnet," a radio play that leaped onto the small screen and then upgraded to the big screen. The show garnered a massive following and firmly established the demand for the police procedural drama.

"Instinct" pulls from this transitory past, as the story began in the pages of a novel. The series is an adaptation of James Patterson's novel "Murder Games," with much of the series' content staying true to Patterson's own words. Fans of literary, small-screen and cinematic adaptations of police procedurals are no stranger to Patterson's works, as he is a dominant force in the genre. Notable early hits for the author on the big screen include 1997's "Kiss the Girls" and 2001's "Along Came a Spider," both of which are clear emblems of the police procedural genre.

So, where lies the twist? While most would expect that to be found in the killer's reveal — which it may very well be — what makes this latest genre series stand out above the rest is the lead character, Reinhart, who, like his novel counterpart, is a married gay man. This move is set to be the first broad-range broadcast of an hour-long series that features a queer lead character, a progressive and timely move by the network. CBS is no stranger to paving the way for cultural and sexual diversity, though, after the recent success of CBS All Access's "Star Trek: Discovery."

This opportunity meant so much to Cumming, who admitted to the Hollywood Reporter that "it was one of the reasons [he] wanted to do the show." The Scottish-American actor is a longtime LG-BTQ2+ activist and advocate, openly bisexual and compassionately proud. The chance to portray Reinhart's character, with all of his layers, was both "an incredible thing and a terrible thing" to Cumming. Given the current political fervor in America — "a time in America where gay people are being persecuted ... our rights are being removed," as Cumming puts it — the actor saw that it was "all the more important to have a character with a healthy same-sex marriage on TV."

While the politics are clearly present in the writing of "Instinct," the series places greater emphasis on its execution of sarcastic wit. Reinhart is a master of words and clever one-liners, always one to note the most culturally and momentarily significant things with an ample dose of observational humor. This plays well alongside Needham's professional drive, as she plays a strong, leading role in the investigation, not afraid to smile but constant in her devotion to the case. The two follow the tradition of unlikely pairings, though it is plain to see they have a chemistry and make a formidable team.

The new era of the police procedurals has arrived, amply stacked with drama, laughs and cultural relevance. With a stellar cast and intriguing premise, it's easy to see why CBS was quick to transform this recent James Patterson novel into a fully realized, hour-long series. Find out if Reinhart and Needham have the skills needed to uncover this literary-loving killer when "Instinct" premieres Sunday, March 18, on CBS.

Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle

Four very different students are tasked with cleaning out their high school's basement for their detention, and while dusting and cleaning, they find an old video game called "Jumanji" among the clutter. When they fire it up, however, they discover that it's anything but a game. They're put into the bodies of their video game avatars as the game sucks them in and comes to life, and with only three "lives" each, the dangerous jungle setting quickly begins doing its best to kill them. With time running out, the four teenagers-turned-video-game-characters deduce that if they want to survive the game, they'll have to beat it. Director: Jake Kasdan. Stars: Dwayne Johnson, Karen Gillan, Kevin Hart, Jack Black, Rhys Darby, Bobby Canavale. 2017. 119 min. Action.

Downsizing

Several years after the technology to irreversibly shrink people to only a few inches tall becomes a reality, Paul (Damon) and his wife, Audrey (Wiig), decide to undergo the procedure and start new, smaller lives. When Audrey backs out at the last possible minute, though, Paul wakes up from the procedure to find her also divorcing him, leaving him to navigate this new miniature world with the help of an old high school friend (Sudeikis) and his tiny new neighbor (Waltz). Director: Alexander Payne. Stars: Matt Damon, Christoph Waltz, Hong Chau, Kristen Wiig, Jason Sudeikis. 2017. 135 min. Comedy.

Affordable eating

Ali Khan's 'Cheap Eats' doesn't break the bank

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

It's no secret that eating out can be expensive. Usually that isn't too hard to get around: just whip something up at home! But sadly, that isn't really an option when you're visiting another city, and bills from eating out for three meals a day (plus some snacks tossed in for good measure) can get pretty pricey in a hurry.

That's where "Cheap Eats" host Ali Khan comes in. The man behind the Bang for your Burger Buck blog returns with a new season of the Cooking Channel series on Wednesday, March 21.

In each episode of "Cheap Eats," the charismatic host visits a new city with nothing but an empty stomach and 35 bucks budgeted for food. That's $35 for the entire day — he needs to have breakfast, lunch and dinner with those limited funds, plus an afternoon snack to boot. Of course, he also avoids the dirt-cheap fast food joints; that would be totally against the spirit of the challenge, and besides, he's in these cities to soak up the local culture, and that includes local foods.

In Wednesday's premiere, Khan is in Philadelphia, a city with a reputation for serving food with an attitude. First he hunts for breakfast, and finds a place serving a local favorite that won't break the bank: a scrapple (a pan-fried pork dish), egg and cheese dip sandwich. Come lunch time, he tracks down a joint serving a Philly original: pork roast served with provolone and spinach.

That's two meals down, but with the snack included, there are still two to go. For an afternoon pick-me-up, he buys some dumplings stuffed with cheese steak, apple pie and cheesecake, and for dinner, Khan heads to the city's Fishtown neighborhood, where he finds a unique twist on ramen that tickles his taste buds while not breaking the bank.

Visiting another city can be expensive, but in "Cheap Eats," Ali Khan shows how to track down the best deals on local meals. It turns out that it is possible to eat out, eat well and even eat affordably. The new season of "Cheap Eats" premieres Wednesday, March 21, on Cooking Channel.

Hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: Can you please tell me why America doesn't get Season 6 of "Father Brown"?

A: You missed a key word there: America doesn't get Season 6 of "Father Brown" yet.

You're right that the season has already aired in the U.K., which is where it's produced, but PBS is still airing previous seasons over here.

The basic problem is that we on this side of the Atlantic have been late in hopping on the "Father Brown" train (Anglophiles will appreciate the rail joke — Brits love trains), which means we have catching up to do.

Unlike a lot of British shows aired over here — think "Downton Abbey" or "Agatha Christie's Poirot" — "Father Brown" is not co-produced by PBS. The network came to the show late, and so its broadcast schedule is far out of sync with the original broadcaster.

Though it's frustrating for fans like yourself, this is usually not seen as a big problem by the network. PBS is not in competition with anyone else for when it airs the episodes, so it can take its time (the fact that you're asking this question proves that you're pretty dependent on PBS for your "Father Brown" fix).

There's also the usual PBS challenge, which is that it doesn't operate like a normal network with a national schedule — individual affiliates are able to set their own programming. Some of them are really far behind, and some don't even air "Father Brown" at all.

As the crime-solving clergyman himself might say (or maybe he's already said it — I haven't seen season 6, either), "patience is a virtue."

Q: Has a Disney animated movie ever won the Best Picture statue?

A: Despite its long and storied cinematic history, Disney has never won the top Oscar for one of its animated features.

It's not for lack of trying, though, and Disney is the only studio that has even stood a chance. Only three animated movies have ever been nominated for Hollywood's top prize, and all three were Disney.

"Beauty and the Beast" (1991) was the first to break that ground, getting the nomination against giant films such as "JFK" and the eventual winner, "The Silence of the Lambs" (making for a pretty broad field of candidates).

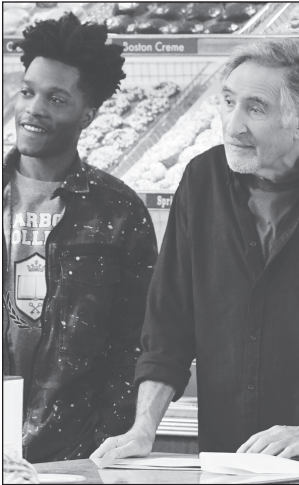

"Beauty" was also the only animated film to garner a nod in the five-nominee era. The Oscars moved to 10 nominees in 2009, which was the year that Disney/Pixar's "Up" was nominated.

The company got another one the very next year for "Toy Story 3" (2010) (the first two installments having been snubbed in the big category).

These films weren't left out of the Oscars entirely, though. "Toy Story 3" and "Up" both won the Best Animated Feature award, and "Beauty and the Beast" won Oscars for its music (this was in the era before there was a category for animated feature).
