Multiple threats plague season 2 of 'Salvation'

By K.A. Taylor
TV Media

Science fiction is increasingly becoming science fact. The dreams of golden era writers and directors, while perhaps a bit exaggerated, are more prevalent now than ever before. Space exploration is advancing, with multiple groups and organizations vowing to establish a new home on Mars. This might explain why so many of us are captivated by intergalactic what-ifs, and why many summer TV viewers are tuning in to the sci-fi drama "Salvation," now in its second season, with a new episode airing Monday, July 16, on CBS.

"Salvation" takes place in present-day America, using modern technology and a dash of fictional liberty to set the stage. Liam Cole (Charlie Row, "Red Band Society") is a highly intellectual MIT graduate student whose research has been devoted to mapping the unknown parts of space. What Liam didn't anticipate, however, was that his program would uncover a serious, impending threat to the entire planet: an asteroid set to collide with Earth in 186 days. Anxious to get the data to the government, Liam reaches out to his professor, but after the professor goes missing, he turns to his one other option: scientific genius Darius Tanz (Santiago Cabrera, "Big Little Lies"), a recent speaker at MIT who's still — thankfully — in town.

Armed with this new, time-sensitive information, Darius and Liam head to the Pentagon and deliver the news to the Department of Defense's deputy secretary, Harris Edwards (Ian Anthony Dale, "Hawaii Five-0"). Harris and DOD public affairs press secretary Grace Barrows (Jennifer Finnigan, "Tyrant") have no choice but to let these two skilled scientists into a covert operation called Sampson, revealing that the government was already well aware of the threat but had chosen to keep it hidden in order to prevent mass pandemonium.

The thrilling conclusion of season 1 saw the president reinstated, TESS's source code given up to RE/SYST and the group divided, awaiting the impending likely demise of the East Coast. Harris and Grace, along with the rest of the selected crew, are all stowed away within a hangar, ready to board the Ark if necessary, while Darius and Liam work from a secrete location to try to determine another way to prevent Earth's destruction.

Santiago Cabrera in "Salvation"

With the second season now underway, it's clear to see that the danger is compounding. RE/SYST is threatening nuclear action, the asteroid's imminent collision continues to present a dire outlook for humanity, and neither situation can be resolved without global co-operation. Meanwhile, Harris and Grace are struggling to quell potential chaos within the hangar as the newly informed citizens learn to accept their fate.

In a recent interview with KCAL9 CBS Los Angeles, Finnigan touched on the growing tension of a disaster-bent narrative. The actress notes that, while "the show is mostly about this impending asteroid — the sort of scaring, impending doom of that," people are "still living [their lives]," as the truth makes it difficult for people to accept, which leads them to set out a course of action that reveals what's truly important to them. Now that "the public knows" and "the secret is out ... people go bananas." An event such as this will no doubt "bring out the best" or to "bring out the worst [in us]," but ultimately, Finnigan believes that the most realistic depiction — something that the series strives to exhibit — is where the best and worst in us collide.

A large part of the show's success is thanks to the popular disaster genre. Most prominent in film, the genre was born in 1901 with a silent film called "Fire!," though "Salvation" is likely drawing more so from the golden era of disaster cinema, circa the 1970s. Films such as "Airport"

(1970), "Earthquake" (1974) and "Meteor" (1979) gave audiences a thirst for the point at which science fiction and dramatic thrillers meet. In the late 1990s, a new wave of disaster films arrived that, like "Salvation," saw our biggest threat coming from the stars. "Independence Day" (1996), "Deep Impact" (1998) and "Armageddon" (1998) are just three of the space-based dramatic thrillers that signified this once niche subcategory of the genre growing increasingly prominent.

Not constricted by the two-to-three-hour runtime of its big-screen forerunners, "Salvation" provides deeper insight into the human reactions and cost of catastrophic events, rather than placing emphasis on fantastic explosions, tidal waves and meteor collisions. Despite the imminence of the threat, audiences find themselves more compelled by the characters' narratives than a desire to witness destruction, which is a refreshing take on a genre increasingly oversaturated with CGI and mass destruction.

As season 2 of "Salvation" progresses, the price of loyalty will increase in value. As the asteroid continues its journey toward Earth, Harris, Grace, Liam and Darius will do all they can to try and maintain a sense of calm while uncovering a means by which disaster might ultimately be prevented. If all else fails, there is, of course, the Ark, but that will mean bidding a tearful adieu to two beloved characters. Find out the fates of our daring heroes and the planet itself, as "Salvation" continues with a new episode airing Monday, July 16, on CBS.

Rampage

George, an albino gorilla living in a wildlife preserve near San Diego, is exposed to a mutagenic pathogen that causes him to both grow larger at an alarming rate and become more aggressive. His handler, Davis (Johnson), learns that the pathogen was developed as a biological weapon, but after government agents take the massive gorilla into captivity, George escapes and heads to Chicago, where the company that developed the pathogen is emitting a signal to attract the animal. When two other beasts that have also been exposed, a wolf and a crocodile, also arrive in the city, a massive battle breaks out between the three titanic animals and the military forces trying to save the city.

Truth or Dare

An innocent game of truth or dare gets all too real for Olivia (Hale) and her friends when a supernatural presence begins killing them if they don't follow the rules. As the players die one by one, Olivia tries to figure out a way to end the game before she and her friends are all killed for lying or refusing to complete a sadistic dare.

Coastal chow down: America's seashores sizzle in new Cooking Channel series

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

The seaside is beautiful at any time of the year, but to most of us, the salty breezes and sandy shores are at their best right now, in the heat of summer. Not all of us live within easy reach of the seaside, but that just makes every visit all the more special.

Of course, a big part of the ocean's appeal is the food, and lobster roll king Sabin Lomac is going coast to coast in his new Cooking Channel show to check out some of the best seaside eats he can find.

"Seaside Snacks & Shacks" premieres Thursday, July 19, with Lomac paying a visit to Lulu's, a classy coastal dive that's run by none other than musician Jimmy Buffett's sister, where Lomac chows down on a fried green tomato pimento cheeseburger that's served up with some classic Southern gumbo. Then, on South Carolina's Daufuskie Island, he digs into deli-icious deviled blue crab and some incredible fried chicken.

It isn't just the East Coast that's on Lomac's itinerary in the premiere. Still hungry, he heads west to San Diego's shore, where a hot-dog stand serves up a chili con carne dog that packs in three different meats, and a blazing-hot bombero dog that's topped with seven super-spicy salsas. For his last stop, he sticks to California and heads to Balboa Island for dessert. While admiring the gorgeous views, he checks out a local favorite: frozen bananas. Not content to enjoy just one, he first tries the original with chocolate and rainbow sprinkles, and follows it up by coming up with his own specialty flavor of the frozen fruit treat.

Through all six episodes, Lomac not only hits coastal destinations in the west and the east, but also the north and south. The shores of Lake Michigan and the Gulf Coast have beaches that are just as spectacular as those in New England or the Carolinas, and the foods served there are just as delightful to boot.

Good food, great views and seaside waves just go together, especially at this time of year. "Seaside Snacks & Shacks" premieres Thursday, July 19, on Cooking Channel.

Hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: A couple of years ago I watched a movie called "The Care and Handling of Roses" starring Ann Jillian and Lee Horsley. She owned a flower nursery. It may have been on a regular TV channel and not cable. I keep looking for it to be on again — a nice love story. Where can I find it?

A: You might want to give up looking. The advent of the Hallmark Channel and Hallmark Movies & Mysteries channel have produced a bit of a boon for old telefilms, but unfortunately, 1996's "The Care and Handling of Roses" wasn't a Hallmark movie. It was made for CBS, and no one's rushing to dig up its back catalog.

Another thing adding to its obscurity is the fact that it's an Ann Jillian movie — that's not a comment on the quality of her movies, just the quantity. She stands as a sort of telefilm legend, having starred in more than 20 of them over the course of her long career. Most notably, of course, she starred in 1988's "The Ann Jillian Story," portraying herself in a dramatization of her life and struggle with breast cancer.

Some of her old telefilms can still be found, but usually just the ones with an extra angle of some kind. For example, you can still pick up DVD copies of "MacShayne: Winner Takes All" (1994), but that's primarily a Kenny Rogers movie, and he has a bigger and more enduring fan base (thanks to that music thing he does on the side).

"The Care and Handling of Roses," on the other hand, is a pure telefilm — a classic example in all the ways that make it unlikely to endure. It was made on a pretty low budget, with a small cast, and tells a slightly sad but ultimately heartwarming story, about two married film-club members who fall for each other.

Q: Didn't Jeff Bridges do a boxing movie when he was young? What was it called, and what can you tell me about it?

A: I can tell you that 1972's "Fat City" was based on a book, that it was one of Jeff Bridges' first major roles, and that he owes it to his big brother Beau.

Beau Bridges auditioned for the role of Ernie, a fresh young kid with a natural talent for boxing, but he said (in an interview on the podcast "WTF With Marc Maron") that he was told he was too old. And so he recommended his little brother Jeff in his stead.

Jeff, of course, fit the bill perfectly. At the time, he was just starting to gain fame playing innocent-looking kids, most notably in "The Last Picture Show," released the previous year.

He shared top billing with another relative newcomer, Stacy Keach, who played an aging boxer who develops a friendship, and rivalry, with Bridges' character.

They both ended up being good choices, as "Fat City" is now considered a classic. It was helped by its source material — the 1969 novel of the same name by Leonard Gardner, which was a finalist for the National Book Award in 1970.

Late laughs

The Tonight Show With Jimmy Fallon
 It was 90 degrees in New York City today. Yeah, you know it's bad when you get that dirty gust of wind from the subway and you go, "Ahh!"

The Late Show With Stephen Colbert
 The story of the week has been Trump's pro-baby-snatching agenda, and today it took another weird turn.

Jimmy Kimmel Live
 I hope you had a good Father's Day weekend. The president spent his Father's Day weekend the same way he does every year. He opens a card and says, "Who's Eric?"

Late Night With Seth Meyers
 President Trump held a campaign rally last night in Minnesota. And long story short, we're now in a trade war with Minnesota.
