The sons of Ragnar are at war, putting the gains of their father into jeopardy as the unity of the Vikings is fractured. With Floki (Gustaf Skarsgård, "Kon-Tiki," 2012) now letting the gods guide him, and Lagertha (Katheryn Winnick, "The Dark Tower," 2017) dealing with civil unrest and a looming prophecy, it's understandable why fans are anxious with anticipation for the season 5 premiere of "Vikings," airing Wednesday, Nov. 29, on History Channel.

A family fractured: Ragnar's sons come to blows in season 5 of 'Vikings'

By Kat Mulligan
TV Media

There is a call, a pull deep within that longs for a time of exploration and expansion, with oars moving quickly through foreign waters, seeking out the next adventure or new-found home with blade and axe in hand.

Since 2013, fans have heeded this call vicariously, becoming followers of Ragnar Lothbrok (Travis Fimmel, "Warcraft: The Beginning," 2016), whose heroic actions saw him expand the Vikings' reach far beyond the Nordic seas. What happens, however, when power is shifted — when sons who have exacted their vengeance must now decide what is the next best move for their people? Perhaps the answer is mere days away, as "Vikings" returns for season 5, Wednesday, Nov. 29, on History Channel.

"Vikings" began as an ambitious project from series creator Michael Hirst, who longed to traverse the thin line between fact and fiction when it came to Viking lore. Ragnar is the perfect example of this duality, for his legacy as a fierce ruler and warrior is still the topic of much debate, as is his personhood, for some believe him a mere legend. The series has seen Ragnar go from an honorable son and earl to the eventual but reluctant king, accompanied by his closest friend, Floki (Gustaf Skarsgård, "Kon-Tiki," 2012), and wife Lagertha (Katheryn Winnick, "The Dark Tower," 2017). Ragnar acquired more land, another wife and increased his lineage, and now five key sons are set to become prominent figures in the future.

The quest to expand is never easy, and season 4 proved this. Predictions came to pass, battle lines were drawn and the leadership of the Viking people was once again left fractured, the unity Ragnar sought to achieve knocked asunder.

The chaos of last season's finale has made season 5's premiere highly anticipated. Everything that has come to pass during the past four seasons means little now that a war between brothers is underway. It is a war that echoes across the waters, with Lagertha's rule also under threat and the seer's vision ever weighing on her mind. One of her sons will kill her, so the seer claimed, but will the answer be an obvious one, like Ivar (Alex Høgh Andersen, "A War," 2015), or someone she cannot anticipate?

Meanwhile, while brothers feud, one son of Ragnar seems determined to further the Viking conquest. Bjorn (Alexander Ludwig, "Final Girl," 2015) will finally trek to the Mediterranean this season, with trailers hinting that a desert storm or two lurks in his future.

Another Viking is also off to explore, though he has chosen to let himself be led by the gods. Floki's destiny awaits him on some foreign shore, as early clips show that he will make contact with land, though where he'll find himself remains one of season 5's most well-guarded secrets.

This year's San Diego Comic-Con was ever the hotbed of discussion for what awaits fans this season in "Vikings." As noted, Floki's character arc is at the top of many cast members' minds, particularly that of the man who plays the role. While discussing Floki's future with Entertainment Weekly, Skarsgård reflected on the weight of multiple sorrows that have led to his character's surrender. According to Skarsgård, "Floki has definitely lost everything" and "submits [himself] to the will of the gods." Skarsgård notes that "this world is not for [Floki] anymore," and that he must go so that he can find "some sort of meaning to live again." As a character with a rich history, his is a journey that is arguably the most anticipated to watch unfold when the series restarts this November.

While other historically based series have struggled to maintain their momentum, "Vikings" seems to have captivated audiences worldwide. Much of this, no doubt, is due to the exquisite craftsmanship of the narrative, thanks to creator and writer Hirst, who is renowned for his attention to detail on historical projects. Films such as "Elizabeth" (1998) and "Elizabeth: The Golden Age" (2007), along with the beloved series "The Tudors," speak to the devotion Hirst has to depicting key historical events with a nice serving of dramatic flair. The research involved, the intricacies of the costumes and settings, and every aspect of production is selected to ensure that the words and historical details are as closely adhered to as possible.

When it comes to "Vikings," Hirst told Entertainment Weekly that "the show has grown in the same way the Viking age grew," which was essential in that "it's about real things, it's about real people." The success of historical dramas such as "Vikings" lies, for Hirst, not necessarily in the beautifully depicted battle sequences or the in-depth historical lore, but in the sheer fact that "in some ways, all of our lives were actually touched by Vikings and Viking culture." The series speaks to a universal longing to be connected to ancestry, therein finding a sense of place and of self.

The waters will get deeper and the waves bloodier, as the wars begin between brothers and a queen. If season 4 holds any clues for what comes next, only more heartache and treachery can await the sons of Ragnar. Unknown lands will be discovered and dire prophecies perhaps fulfilled as season 5 of "Vikings" returns Wednesday, Nov. 29, on History Channel.

Soul food

Patti LaBelle fills more than bellies in 'Patti LaBelle's Place'

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

There's something about good music and good food that just makes them go well together. They're both great on their own, but put them together and you can create something that really feeds the soul.

Music legend Patti LaBelle couldn't epitomize the union between music and food any better if she tried. As the "Godmother of soul," LaBelle maintains a legacy in the music industry that is undisputed, with her solo career first catching fire in 1984, with hit singles "New Attitude" and "Stir It Up" successfully crossing over to pop radio stations. As for food, she proved pretty decisively in the first season of her Cooking Channel series that she can blend together flavors in the kitchen just as beautifully as she does harmonies in the recording studio or on stage.

When the second season of "Patti LaBelle's Place" premieres Sunday, Nov. 26, on Cooking Channel, the Grammy Hall of Fame member invites Cedric the Entertainer ("The Soul Man") over to her place for some music, laughter and, of course, hearty food. First, LaBelle shares her secrets to making perfect lamb chops and candied sweet potatoes, which she serves with fresh sautéed spinach.

Cedric the Entertainer isn't her only guest for the season premiere, though. "Dancing with the Stars" judge Carrie Ann Inaba reunites with LaBelle — who was a contestant in the dance show's 20th season — when she also swings by for a bite to eat. Luckily, the host is always ready for another hungry mouth; she quickly whips up a simple and delicious raspberry pie that gets everyone's taste buds dancing.

Over the course of the season, LaBelle welcomes many more high-profile guests, including Laverne Cox ("Orange Is the New Black"), R&B artist Johnny Gill, former "NBC News" anchor Tamron Hall, Olympic gold medalist Laurie Hernandez and actress/comedian Kym Whitley ("Young & Hungry").

Of course, LaBelle's guests aren't just getting warm food and even warmer hospitality. Music is the host's true passion, and it fills every frame in the second season of "Patti LaBelle's Place," premiering Sunday, Nov. 26, on Cooking Channel.

Hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: My husband and I were just wondering why "The Sting" is not being shown on any of the networks. We would love to be able to see this movie again without having to pay a fee!

A: It can be incredibly frustrating that network programmers don't have to explain their decisions to us. It's certainly fair — they're just trying to run businesses, after all — but because of this fact, I have no definitive answer for why we don't see the genre-defining 1973 heist classic "The Sting" more often.

I can offer a couple of completely contradictory theories, though.

It's possible programmers think we're tired of it. Based on your question, they'd be wrong, but the fact is that once upon a time, this movie was unavoidable on TV. Having killed at the box office and cleaned up at the Oscars in the mid-'70s, "The Sting" was a cultural phenomenon by the time the '80s rolled around, and it's certainly had more than its share of air-time since then. Perhaps programmers think it needs a break.

A related theory: it might be a victim of its own success in a different way. "The Sting" has basically become the template for the heist movie, and it has led to a huge number of popular successors, such as "Reservoir Dogs" (1992) and "Ocean's Eleven" (2001). (Note that I say "The Sting" popularized the heist-movie template — "Ocean's Eleven" is, of course, a remake of an even older movie, but one that wasn't nearly as popular or influential.) The airwaves these days are full of subsequent heist movies that owe a debt to "The Sting," but ones that may also be squeezing it out of the schedule.

Q: Is it true Roy Scheider ad-libbed the "bigger boat" line in Jaws?

A: It's true that the line wasn't in the script, but "Jaws" (1975) star Roy Scheider didn't come up with it on his own. "You're gonna need a bigger boat" was actually a complaint that many of the crew members had been making to the producers about the little barge they were given to film the horror classic's open-water scenes.

Script writer Carl Gottlieb told the story to The Hollywood Reporter: "[Richard] Zanuck and [David] Brown were very stingy producers, so everyone kept telling them, 'You're gonna need a bigger boat.' It became a catchphrase for anytime anything went wrong — if lunch was late or the swells were rocking the camera, someone would say, 'You're gonna need a bigger boat.'"

Scheider apparently dropped the line several times during filming, but the instance that made the final cut — when Scheider's character first sets eyes on the monstrous shark they're trying to catch from the deck of their little fishing boat — was deemed to be perfect.

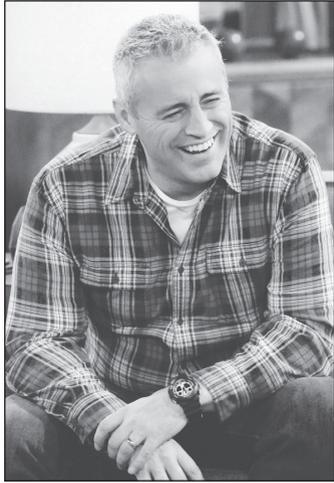

However, Gottlieb is still unwilling to give Scheider all the credit for it. "It was so appropriate and so real and it came at the right moment, thanks to Verna Fields's editing."

Bravo
Million Dollar Listing
Los Angeles

When some high rollers from Chicago come to town, Josh Altman wheels and deals to find their dream house in a new episode of "Million Dollar Listing Los Angeles," airing Thursday, Nov. 30, on Bravo. While Altman is busy, James and David decide to take a new approach with their listing and host a giant open house.
