Third time's the charm: HBO comedy 'Insecure' is back for season 3

By Kyla Brewer
TV Media

As young women navigate the ups and downs of modern life, it helps to have a crew of steadfast girlfriends along for the ride.

Issa Dee (Issa Rae, "The Misadventures of Awkward Black Girl") relies on her close friends in another eight-episode season of the award-winning HBO series "Insecure," airing Sunday, Aug. 19. When the season opened the week before, Issa was living with her ex, Daniel (Y'lan Noel, "The First Purge," 2018), and her precarious financial situation means it would be unwise to move out. Meanwhile, her BFF, Molly (Yvonne Orji, "Night School," 2018), struggles to keep it together now that she's finally landed her dream job at a black-owned law firm.

Created by Rae and loosely based on her hit web series "Awkward Black Girl," the series offers viewers a glimpse into the lives of a tight-knit group of black women, who are often underrepresented in prime-time television. This season, the women strive to make the right decisions as they continue to evolve in their 30s. In an interview with the Hollywood Reporter, Rae talked about how the characters grow in season 3.

"This season is about not acting like you're naive anymore or that you don't know better," Rae explained. "So it is about, what does it look like to know better and to do better?"

Following their mantra to "know better, do better," Issa and her pals face the realities of their situations. Now that she's no longer with Lawrence ("Jay Ellis," "The Game"), Issa is conflicted about her complicated relationship with Daniel, her childhood friend and on-again, off-again lover. Professionally, she isn't sure about her future with the nonprofit she's been working for, We Got Y'all.

As for Daniel, he struggles to get his music career off the ground. While fans of Ellis, who played Issa's love interest in the first two seasons, are likely disappointed he isn't back, this season opens the door to explore a new side of African American culture through the eyes of Daniel. In a June interview with Vibe.com,

Issa Rae stars in "Insecure"

Rae revealed one of this season's major themes.

"I love black masculinity as it relates to black women," Rae said. "I think that's something interesting that we haven't gotten a chance to explore yet — and specifically toxic male black masculinity as it relates to black women. I'm trying to find a way to explore that and get a rounded storyline that isn't preachy."

Issa and her relationship issues may take up a lot of time, but black female friendship is still at the core of "Insecure" in season 3. While Issa tries to figure out what to do about Daniel and her career, Molly deals with her own problems. She may be a successful corporate lawyer, but she hasn't been able to translate that kind of success into her romantic pursuits. To make matters worse, her hang-ups and insecurities could sabotage her newly secured dream job.

A very pregnant Tiffany (Amanda Seales, "My Brother and Me") deals with the pressures of impending motherhood, but she still finds time to spend with her girlfriends. However, it's obvious the dynamics of the group are changing.

Natasha Rothwell ("Love, Simon," 2018) — who's been in the news recently because of her casting in "Wonder Woman 1984" (due in 2019) — reprises her role as the group's straight shooter, Kelli. Rothwell also works as a writer on the series, which focuses on diversity both in front of and behind the camera.

From the beginning, Rae was determined to assemble an inclusive team to work on "Insecure." When HBO was looking for a director for the comedy-drama, she recommended Grammy-winning music video director Melina Matsoukas, known for her work behind the camera of Solange Knowles' "Losing You" video. She's directed a number of episodes of "Insecure," and her involvement led to Knowles becoming the show's music consultant.

Music is a big part of the series. Featuring indie acts and established artists, the show's soundtrack has earned praise from critics and fans, who can't get enough of Rae's raps in front of her mirror. Songs from Drake, Vince Staples, Blood Orange and D'Angelo have been featured on the show, along with music from "Insecure's" official composer, Raphael Saadiq, who rose to fame as a member of the R&B group Tony! Toni! Toné!

The mix of music, comedy and drama has earned the first two seasons of "Insecure" many accolades for Rae and her cohorts, including two pending Emmy nominations. Rae has been nominated in the Outstanding Lead Actress in a Comedy Series category and Patrick Cady has been nominated for a cinematography Emmy for season 2's "Hella LA" episode. Rae's role as Issa has also earned her a Golden Globe nomination and consecutive NAACP Image Award nominations for both acting and writing. "Insecure" was named one of the top 10 TV programs of the year in 2017.

Rae may be enjoying her success these days, but things aren't so great for her on-screen alter ego. Luckily, Issa has her gal pals to lean on in the new season of "Insecure," airing Sunday, Aug. 19, on HBO.

New series makes the latest food trends easy as pie

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

When it comes to cooking, there are the timeless classics that every basic cookbook and how-to culinary show tries to teach. But what if you're a humble home cook who wants to replicate that amazingly complex dish that you had while out at a restaurant? Or what if the latest food fad has you interested, but the actual steps behind making it leave you scratching your head?

No need to worry — Food Network's newest show has you covered. "Let's Eat" premiered last week and currently airs Sunday mornings. Three talented hosts and a ton of special guests check out all that is current in the culinary world, and they break down the latest trends into easy-to-follow steps while sharing their best tricks, tips and recipes.

"Let's Eat" is hosted by Irish celebrity chef Stuart O'Keeffe, who starred in "Private Chefs of Beverly Hills," YouTube channel "POPSUGAR Food: Eat the Trend" host Brandi Milloy and former "Food Network Star" contestant Jamika Pessoa. Together, the trio teaches audiences the latest in innovative cooking techniques that make time spent in the kitchen easier, faster or just more creative. Whether it's a classic chicken pot pie that boasts a tater tot crust or hush puppies stuffed with bacon, cheddar and jalapeno, these three aren't afraid to take shortcuts or mess with traditional dishes so long as the end result is wow-worthy.

The hosts aren't tied to their kitchen, either. They frequently head out to restaurants that are home to dishes that have gone viral, where they dive into the secrets that have made them so popular and meet with their creators, getting tips for making them straight from the mouths of the chefs that know them best.

Much like fashion, food trends come and go, and it can be hard to keep up with not only the latest hot dishes but also the cooking techniques used to make them at home. Luckily, "Let's Eat's" three hosts are doing the legwork so that home cooks can focus on what's important: presenting absolutely beautiful and mouthwatering dishes. "Let's Eat" currently airs Sundays on Food Network.

Hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: I know the main agent in “Get Smart” is Maxwell Smart, but do they ever say the name of Agent 99?

A: This was a matter of confusion for decades, until Agent 99 herself came out of retirement to clear it up in 2016.

Barbara Feldon, who played the oh-so-’60s super spy on all five seasons of “Get Smart,” did an interview with Forbes magazine in 2016 in which she spoke with great fondness about the role for which she’s best remembered. Most importantly, the interviewer asked point-blank whether Agent 99 had another name, and she revealed that, like yourself, it’s something that bothered her for years after the show ended in 1970.

“I wasn’t sure until I saw Buck [Henry, one of the show’s creators] again a while back, and he said absolutely not.”

This contradicts many fans who have maintained that her name was, in fact, Susan Hilton, as revealed in the 1968 episode “99 Loses CONTROL.”

Agent 99 says at the end of that episode that Hilton was just another alias (her character had several), but in the world of international espionage, who’s to say who’s telling the truth and who isn’t?

Well, Buck Henry can say. “Susan Hilton was a primer name they used in one of the episodes,” Feldon explained in the Forbes interview, “but he said no, she was just a number.”

Of course, shortly after that, she did get at least part of a name: She became Mrs. Smart when she and Maxwell (alias Agent 86) got married in the following season.

Q: Is it true Jason Statham was an Olympic swimmer before he started acting?

A: No on two points, and it’s a good thing you’re asking me and not him because it’s “a bit of a sore point.”

British big-screen tough guy Jason Statham did compete in the Commonwealth Games — which are largely seen as warm-ups for the Olympics — but it was in diving, not swimming. And he didn’t bring home any hardware.

He was selected to represent Britain in the 1990 Commonwealth Games, competing in the one-meter, three-meter and 10-meter events, finishing in eighth, 11th and 10th places, respectively. They were good showings on the international stage but not enough to get promoted to the biggest stage of all — and that fact still bothers the multimillionaire film star.

“It’s a bit of a sore point I never got to the Olympics,” he said in an interview with the Press Association in 2016.

Of course, it wasn’t a total loss. Shortly after the Commonwealth Games, he was scouted by a modeling agency, and then by director Guy Ritchie to co-star in his groundbreaking gangster comedies “Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels” (1998) and “Snatch” (2000). Those turned Statham into an in-demand action hero.

The Tonight Show With Jimmy Fallon

The Wall Street Journal says that we are living in a "Golden Age of Tattoos," which can only mean that in a few years we'll be living through the "Golden Age of Regret."

I heard that you can now buy a Lego version of the Hogwarts Castle that's made up of 6,000 pieces. There's even a name for anyone who finishes it: "He Who Must Not Be Dating Anyone."

The Late Late Show With James Corden

A man in New Hampshire was arrested after walking around a Planet Fitness gym completely naked. He defended himself by telling officers he thought it was a "judgment-free zone," because that's the gym's motto. So apparently there is such a thing as too much body positivity.
