Doctors have the power to save lives, but medicine isn't practiced by saints — it's a business. "The Resident" pulls back the curtain on the power, money and corruption behind modern medicine, as seen through the eyes of a new doctor on his first day. One senior resident takes on the recklessness of doctors in power, even if that means losing face. See who lets the money go to their head in "The Resident," premiering Sunday, Jan. 21, on Fox.

Doctors or businessmen?: 'The Resident' shows both faces

By Sarah Jamieson
TV Media

Doctors may have the power to save lives, but they can also use that power to cover up their mistakes. Medicine isn't practiced by saints — it's a business, after all, and that reality can have some dramatic repercussions. See its effects on new doctors in "The Resident," which premieres Sunday, Jan. 21, on Fox.

The network's newest drama examines the good, the bad and the ugly behind the blue curtain of modern-day medicine. Doctors — especially new doctors — struggle with the realization that they can't fix an institution that's more focused on money than on saving people's lives.

Dr. Conrad Hawkins (Matt Czuchry) is more frustrated than anybody by this fact, as he tells Dr. Devon Pravesh (Manish Dayal) on the latter's first day of his residency. Pravesh is the first-year resident that Hawkins socializes to the hospital. Young and ambitious, he wants to be an outstanding doctor — one of the only things the two can find common ground on — but Pravesh realizes that his indoctrination will be nothing as he expected. In the first 10 minutes, Hawkins informs him that everything he's learned about medicine is wrong, and to take off his tie because he's "not at Harvard anymore." When Pravesh asks for a new supervisor (he maintains that Dr. Hawkins is a psychopath), a nurse tells him to watch and learn.

Considering the success of both "Scrubs" and "House," the medical field basis for the series seems to be a good sign for its longevity. Plus, Czuchry has his acting chops. He made his big debut in the big-screen horror-comedy "Eight Legged Freaks" (2002), but he's probably best known for his role as Logan Huntzberger in "Gilmore Girls" and as an alumnus of "The Good Wife."

Dr. Hawkins has the same level of brilliance as Dr. House, but with better social skills. Kind of. He has the whip-smart comebacks that resembles Dr. Cox from "Scrubs," and in one scene he tells the junior residents to "try and not kill anyone" while he's on another floor.

Dayal is best known for his starring role in "The Hundred-Foot Journey" (2014) and "Viceroy's House" (2017), but fans may also recognize him from his role as Vijay Nadeer in "Marvel's Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D."

Matt Czuchry stars in "The Resident"

Melina Kanakaredes plays Dr. Lane Hunter, an oncologist who tells Dr. Hawkins that they can't save everyone — of course, he replies with a cocky "says who?" Kanakaredes is no amateur when it comes to television, either. Her early television credits include a recurring role in "NYPD Blue," and she also guest-starred in "The Practice," "Oz," and starred for five seasons as Dr. Sydney Hansen in NBC's critically acclaimed series "Providence." After a brief hiatus from television for a role in "Cabaret" on Broadway, she returned in 2004 for a role in "CSI: NY" and appeared opposite movie legend Robert De Niro in "15 Minutes" (2001).

Emily VanCamp ("Revenge") plays Nicolette, the nurse who tells Dr. Pravesh to listen and learn from Dr. Hawkins. She's also Dr. Hawkins' on-again, off-again romance. The rate of medical error was shocking for the actress, who studied statistics intently for her character. It's the third-leading cause of death, she told Access Hollywood in an interview.

Hawkins uses unorthodox methods, such as throwing ice on a patient to revive her, but he never forgets the risks of the job. Unlike Dr. Solomon Bell (Bruce Greenwood, "Mad Men"), Hawkins knows the repercussions of a bad decision. Dr. Bell is a celebrity doctor with a lot to lose: he bills over $20 million per year, and he's also the chief of surgery. So, after he hits an artery during a relatively safe procedure and kills a patient, no one questions him when he covers it up with a pre-existing condition — no one except Hawkins, of course, who tells the chief of medicine to consider changing his methods before killing additional patients.

Hawkins may be young, but he's not out of line — he's experienced the fallout of his mistakes. He carries around a picture of a little girl who died due to an error on his part, and the reminder helps him stay humble and diligent.

Most doctors only want to help their patients — but what they don't teach, Hawkins explains, is that there are so many ways to harm. The doctors of "The Resident" will break all the rules that they followed in school. But if it were easy, as Hawkins says, everyone would be a doctor. After all, saving people's lives is the best job in the world.

"The Resident" will replace Fox's "Rosewood," the network's recently canceled medical drama. Other than "The X-Files" revival and Seth MacFarlane's live-action dramedy "The Orville," it's the only drama picked up this season.

There are many medical shows, but "The Resident" will get to the root of what it feels like to be in the trenches of the medical profession today. Don't miss the series premiere airing Sunday, Jan. 21, on Fox.

Let them eat cake

'Cake Hunters' challenges bakers to make crowd-pleasing creations

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

You know, it occurs to me that there are three different categories of cake.

There's the sort that's easy to whip up at home and that doesn't get too elaborate with the decorations or with teetering tiers: they have just a simple icing, maybe a nice ganache or even some sprinkles. Then there's the more elaborate creations, the sort usually pulled out of the oven for birthdays, anniversaries or other special events, with colorful themes and well wishes written in icing on the top.

It's that third category, though, where things get really interesting. We're talking towering creations, the sorts of edible art that shows like "Cake Boss" love to show off, and the surge in popularity for these stunning creations has led to a bunch of TV shows being made about them. "Cake Hunters" on Cooking Channel is just one of them, albeit one with its own special style.

The latest season premiered last week and currently airs Friday evenings on the culinary network, and in this week's Jan. 26 episode, a mother and daughter can't agree on a cake style for Kendelle's upcoming Sweet 16 party. She wants a cake that celebrates her maturity, with a theme that embraces her love of music, theater and the arts.

Her mom, Bambi, has different ideas for her little girl's celebration. She wants sugar, spice and everything nice in a cake that Kendelle thinks would be better suited for a toddler.

In each week's episode, two conflicting cake visions are tackled by three professional bakers. This week they're challenged to design a cake that will please both mother and daughter, and once the family chooses which design they want to go with, the bakers face their next daunting challenge: baking, building and decorating the edible art creation on a tight schedule, and then getting it delivered to the party venue in one piece.

Combining two conflicting visions into one cake isn't easy, but it's the sort of thing that the pros do on the job every day. "Cake Hunters" takes audiences inside that flour-filled world Friday evenings on Cooking Channel.

Hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: Did Anna Kendrick actually write the song “Cups” that gained her so much popularity?

A: No, and it never used to be called “Cups” either.

The wildly popular hit from the “Pitch Perfect” soundtrack, performed in the film a capella by star Anna Kendrick using only a plastic cup for accompaniment, began life all the way back in 1931 as “When I’m Gone,” by the Carter Family.

The Carter Family was a groundbreaking bluegrass/gospel act, and their original version didn’t feature any cups at all, just the three Carter Family singers (Sara Carter, her husband A.P. Carter and A.P.’s sister-in-law, Maybelle) accompanied by Sara’s acoustic guitar.

Not only did Kendrick not write the song, she didn’t even add the cups. That transformation came in 2009 via Lulu and the Lampshades, who made a cheap video of themselves doing it in what appears to be their living room. The video went viral, viewed on YouTube millions of times.

It’s basically their version that Kendrick performs in the 2012 sleeper-hit film “Pitch Perfect,” about an all-girls a capella group.

But Kendrick is likely the one to have made the most money from it (or, more accurately, her managers and producers did). The song was released as a single from the soundtrack, and hit No. 6 on the Billboard chart, achieving platinum certification in the U.S. and Australia and gold status in New Zealand (the presence of Australian star Rebel Wilson in the film’s cast made it a particular phenomenon down that way).

Q: Was the movie “School Ties” based on a book or something? I loved that movie.

A: It wasn’t based on a book, but you’re probably familiar with the author.

The 1992 film, about anti-semitism at a New England prep school for boys, was written by TV mega-writer Dick Wolf (along with Darryl Ponicsan, who also writes books on the side).

Wolf was already an established TV writer at the time and had just launched his career-defining franchise, “Law & Order,” two years earlier. However, the show had yet to become the television phenomenon it would one day be, and so he was still dabbling in film and other projects.

But he was already known as a cop-show guy by that point (he got his start writing scripts for “Hill Street Blues” and “Miami Vice” in the ‘80s), so “School Ties” was a bit of a deviation for him.

As for the story, he insists that though he is Jewish and did go to an exclusive prep school as a boy, the story of a young man having to hide his Jewish faith in order to be accepted was not autobiographical. That said, he told the Hollywood Reporter that “anti-Semitism was certainly alive and well in America then, and still is now.”

Conan
Pizza Hut is planning to start adding alcohol to their deliveries. This of course raises the question: "Which wine pairs best with terrible pizza?"

Ireland will be collecting $15 billion from Apple in a settlement over back taxes.
$15 billion for Ireland, yeah.

Ireland will receive the money on Friday, and Guinness will have it all by Monday.

Amazon is now making it possible to create a shopping profile for your cat. Yeah, all you have to do is go to Amazon and type in
"I am single."

A new book claims that for Donald Trump, the four basic food groups are
"McDonalds, KFC, pizza and Diet Coke." When they heard, the American people

were outraged and said,
"DIET Coke? What's your problem, snowflake?"

The Tonight Show With Jimmy Fallon
Prince William said that Prince George just played a sheep in his school's Nativity play. Which raises the question: how rich were the other kids that Prince George wound up playing a sheep?

Tomorrow is SantaCon! It's the annual bar crawl where people dress up like Santa Claus for a day of drinking.
It's also the day Uber drivers walk out of their apartment and say, "Nope!"

The International Olympic Committee just announced that it has banned Russia from competing in the 2018 Winter Olympics
because of doping violations. Or, as Putin put it: "Hello, Donald? Is time to return favor."

Late Night With Seth Meyers
Starbucks is serving a new limited-edition "Christmas Tree Frappuccino" that has peppermint syrup and mocha sauce topped with green whipped cream, candied cranberry, a strawberry and a caramel drizzle. And like a real Christmas tree, anyone who drinks it will be dead by
Dec. 25.
