Jay Hernandez stars in "Magnum P.I."

Private investigator Thomas Magnum returns to TV screens on Monday, Sept. 24, when CBS doubles down on the reboot trend and reintroduces another fondly remembered franchise of yore with "Magnum P.I." Jay Hernandez ("Suicide Squad," 2016) takes on the titular role in the reboot, while the character of Higgins is now female, played by Welsh actress Perdita Weeks ("Ready Player One," 2018). Catch the premiere when it airs Monday, Sept. 24, on CBS.

Back to the well: 'Magnum P.I.' returns to television with CBS reboot

By Kenneth Andeel TV Media

A me the most famous mustache to ever grace a TV screen. You have 10 seconds to deduce the answer, and should you fail, a shadowy cabal of drugdealing, bank-robbing, helicopterhijacking racketeers will forever escape justice, in possession of a priceless crystal figurine and a dossier of fantastically important government secrets.

With stakes so high, I'm confident that you'll provide the correct information without breaking a sweat and declare that the single, indisputable answer is that of Thomas Sullivan Magnum, the now-iconic namesake of the 1980s hit, "Magnum, P.I." This fall, CBS is counting on the enduring recognition of that iconic character when it reboots the classic series with Jay Hernandez ("Suicide Squad," 2016) as the inheritor of the Magnum mojo. Catch the premiere when it airs Monday, Sept. 24, on CBS.

Hernandez is backed up by Welsh actress Perdita Weeks ("Ready Player One," 2018) in the role of Higgins, the straight woman to Magnum's wild card, and fellow Americans Zachary Knighton ("Happy Endings") and Stephen Hill ("Boardwalk Empire") as Rick and TC, close friends of Magnum's from his military past.

The pilot for the new series was greenlit in February of this year, and a polished trailer for the show was dropped in May. The person behind the controls is Peter M. Lenkov, a self-professed fan of the '80s "Magnum" and a writer/producer on CBS's first Hawaiian crime-fest reboot, "Hawaii Five-0." Lenkov's secret weapon for the pilot was director Justin Lin. Lin is best known for thrilling audiences with his dynamic and outrageous action sequences in the immensely popular Fast and the Furious franchise, and his skill at creating high-energy setpieces is bringing Magnum back with a bang. The original "Magnum, P.I." first

The original "Magnum, P.I." first aired in 1980, but for many critics and fans, the show holds up in significant ways. It still receives praise for being an early depiction of a Vietnam War veteran character, and the charisma of its star, Tom Selleck ("Blue Bloods"), has cemented the titular character as a memorable part of TV history.

Perdita Weeks stars in "Magnum P.I."

The modern sensibilities of figureheads such as Lin and Lenkov heavily inform the reboot, and the differences between the old "Magnum, P.I." and the new "Magnum P.I." go well beyond that missing comma. For starters, the mustache is MIA. The first teaser photo of Hernandez in his new role made it clear that the show wasn't interested in being a 1:1 remake of its predecessor and was willing to take big, potentially clumsy risks that could attract the ire of diehard Magnum-heads.

Magnum's second most essential possession (after the mustache) was his red Ferrari, and it turns out that that ride wasn't so sacred, either. The Ferrari appears in the trailer for the show, but after a good-natured meta taunt, the trailer sends the poor vehicle to explode into smithereens at the wrong end of a speeding, multiton transport truck. And then the pulverized pieces fall off a cliff. So much for tradition.

These sorts of changes seem like a declaration of intent and a statement that the show isn't interested in superficial fan service. Beyond these examples, however, are other alterations that seem to come from a more thoughtful place. The original Thomas Magnum was something of a boilerplate avatar of American heroism — the strapping, broad-chested former quarterback that audiences would have recognized from countless other stories. Hernandez earned the role in a culture that has made strides in offering a variety of representation. The Mexican-American actor would have probably been relegated to supporting character status in the original series, but in 2018, a major network is happy to have him as the lead.

The casting of Weeks in the role of Juliet Higgins was a deliberate decision meant to erode some of the "Boys' Club" atmosphere of the original series, in which Higgins was a male character. Some commentators have expressed concern that the grudging friendship between Higgins and Magnum — a big part of the original show's charm — might be replaced by an overused dependence on sexual tension in the new formula. That will ultimately come down to the skill and restraint of the writing staff, however, and there's no inherent reason the new dynamic can't be as engrossing as its prototype was. There will be other notable cam-

There will be other notable cameos, though. Supporting characters from "Hawaii Five-0" will pop up during the first two episodes of "Magnum P.I.," and more involved crossovers featuring lead characters will occur later in the season. Hawaii's not that big, so it's perfectly logical that all of these tropical crime-fighters would find their paths crossing.

The initial announcement and gradual reveal of the "Magnum P.I." reboot has drawn mixed reactions, and a fair amount of skepticism, but perhaps the increased scrutiny will lead to more interested eyeballs when the series debuts. The network is hoping that the recent success of other rebooted properties across the television world (including its own "Hawaii Five-0") bode well for the latest example of this trend. This fall will give us an idea as to whether "Magnum P.I." can recapture some of the lasting pop culture penetration and abiding critical acclaim of the original, or if it will end up swept out to sea. Catch the premiere on Monday, Sept. 24, on CBS.

Halloween-themed baking competition returns to Food Network

By Andrew Warren TV Media

ell, it's officially autumn, and for lots of people that means preparations for the year's spookiest holiday are in full swing. The folks over at Food Network are no exception, with a terrifying number of Halloweenthemed shows and even more themed episodes of the culinary channel's tried-and-true series. First out of the gate is "Halloween Baking Championship," premiering Monday, Sept. 24. The audience favorite returns for a fourth season with eight new bakers eager to show off their skills to the judges in a series of chilling challenges that just get more and more difficult as the competition progresses.

Speaking of judges, this year's trio of panelists will look awfully familiar to fans, with the same three baking experts returning for more treats. Former "The Chew" host Carla Hall is back in the chair that she's kept warm through every season since the very first season of "Halloween Baking Championship." She brings an expansive breadth of culinary expertise to the judging table, having competed and done well — in two seasons of Bravo's "Top Chef."

Hall is joined by two other returning judges. Pastry chef Zac Young, who's a frequent guest in a wide array of Food Network and Cooking Channel shows, is back for a second season, along with model-turned-culinary expert Lorraine Pascale, who's had a number of hit cooking shows in her native United Kingdom, and who also serves as a judge in Food Network's "Spring

Baking Championship" and "Holiday Baking Championship."

It isn't just the judges who have returned for another year's trick-ortreating. Three-time Emmy nominee John Henson, who hosted ABC's "Wipeout" for its seven-season run, returns to host for a second season, assigning the bakers their insidiously difficult tasks and providing witty commentary throughout.

It isn't just a cash prize at stake for the bakers. On top of the $25,000, the winner also gets the honor of being featured in Food Network Magazine - truly a worthy trick-or-treating haul! "Halloween Baking Championship" premieres Monday, Sept. 24, on Food Network.

Hollywood Q&A

By Adam Thomlison TV Media

Q:We still miss our weekly favorite TV show, "Grimm." Will they ever do a followup or a reunion show?

A: Short answer: No. Long answer: Still no, but you can pretend. For example, you can pretend that the stage play "Guilty Until Proven Innocent," if it ever happens, is a "Grimm" reunion. The play recently went through what's called an industry reading — a sort of dry run for plays, where actors read the script before an audience in the hopes of working out some kinks and maybe drumming up interest from backers.

Among the performers were former "Grimm" stars Reggie Lee (Sgt. Wu), Bree Turner (Rosalee) and Danny Bruno (Bud), and the reading was directed by Terrence O'Hara, who helmed several "Grimm" episodes.

If you really want to give your imagination a workout, you can pretend that actors David Giuntoli and Elizabeth Tulloch are actually living out some kind of performance-art spinoff of "Grimm." The two played lead couple Nick and Juliette on the show, but they also got married in real life and share a home in the Hollywood Hills. Imagination aside, the fact that they're married can only increase the likelihood that they'll want to work together again.

Q:What did Bill Pullman do before "Spaceballs"? How did he get such a big role with so little before it? A: Basically, Bill Pullman got the "Spaceballs" (1987) role because producer/writer/director Mel Brooks couldn't get either of the other guys he wanted. That might seem harsh, until you know that the other guys he wanted were Tom Cruise and Tom Hanks.

Speaking at a Q&A session after a 2011 screening of the movie, Pullman said that Brooks told him he was only picked after Cruise and Hanks, both huge stars at the time, refused. "He imagined he was going to get a big box office draw at the time and I think he was hurt that they didn't take him up on it, you know?"

His account of the story gets even sadder from there. "But then it configured differently, attracting two of the big comics at that time: John Candy and Rick Moranis. Once that was secured, then he said, 'Heck, I'll get somebody nobody knows!' And I got a chance to do it."

That's overstating it a little, though. He wasn't a complete unknown, having appeared in a supporting role in the hit comedy "Ruthless People" the year before. And, of course, he wouldn't remain unknown for long — his star rose pretty quickly after starring as the dashing rogue Lone Star in the now-classic space spoof.

However, according to Pullman, that wasn't necessarily thanks to "Spaceballs." He lamented the fact that it was panned by the critics and generally failed to make a splash at the time. "It was disappointing, and there were fans, but they weren't as vocal as they became later on."
