Ghost Says That Business Will be Resumed When Weather Moderates

Last night's mail brought a letter to the office of the Herald and for the benefit of the police and a few others who entertained the idea that there was no ghost or that if there was he had abandoned business for good, it is printed as follows:

Depths of the Tomb, Greenwood—
Editor Herald: During the last thirty-six hours the temperature here has been decidedly crimpy and I know that it is even worse outside and for that reason I have not ventured out. I have not yet concluded my engagement and as soon as the temperature moderates a trifle I will be doing business at the old stand. You may learn later that ghosts are peculiarly susceptible to cold and I don't fancy the practice of wandering about on the cold pavement in my bare feet. I noticed that Travis said I glide and do not walk. If I meet him again he'll change his mind and it will be his fault if I don't see him. Tell all the fellows to have a little patience and I'll be around again in a few days. I have a tendency to rheumatic joints when the weather changes and am lying low until it's warmer. I am really anxious that the weather should moderate at an early day for my furlough will soon expire and when it does I'll have no occasion to complain about the cold.

Yours Till Then,
THE GHOST IN BLACK.
