editor's welcome

A season worth greeting

Once again, the holiday season is here in South County and with it, the final issue of South County Life Magazine for 2021. Looking back on the year behind us, even thought it's been a difficult one at times, there's still lots to be thankful for: the many wonderful contributions from our talented writers and photographers; our fascinating story subjects who have shared their lives with us; our supportive advertisers; and most importantly, you, our readers.

In "Special Delivery," Jessica Abbiati reminds us all of how much we have to be thankful for with a story of a young North Kingstown woman's mission to help children with pediatric cancer. Ali Hornung started the Glimmer of Hope Foundation after developing a close friendship with Ella Integlia, who died of leukemia at age 14 but who first inspired a project to send dolls and wellness packages to children across the nation.

In "M'All the Fixings," Bill Seymour and Michael Derr take a trip to the venerable Wakefield Mall to explore how the indoor shopping center has evolved over the past four decades. Built in the 1970s, the mall has endured despite major changes in the retail shopping environment over the years. The mall's owners and tenants both say there is a special relationsip between the center and its customers that has stood the test of time.

In "Home for the Holidays," Jessica Abbiati and Michael Derr bring the reader on a quick but wide-ranging tour of some of the opportunities to "shop local" for holiday gift-givers. If you have hard-toshop-for loved ones on your list, this gift guide could come in handy. South County's small businesses have things to offer everyone from the artist to the luxury lover to the outdoor adventurer.

Thanks for picking up this edition of South County Life, and may you and your loved ones enjoy a happy and healthy holiday season.

South County Art Association will celebrate a big milestone this year as its annual Holiday Pottery and Art Sale turns 50. This year's sale begins on Friday, November 26 and runs through Sunday, December 19. Pictured above and below are samples of the work that has been shown and sold at previous sales.

GOOD AS GOLDEN

It's a milestone moment for South County Art Association this season as the organization celebrates its 50th annual Holiday Pottery and Art Sale

The holiday season is all about traditions. Whether it's taking your yearly photo with Santa, bringing your friends together for a Yankee Swap party or waiting until Christmas Eve to open your first gift or, there's nothing more comforting than reliability as the temperatures drop and you get ready to celebrate the season.

Perhaps that's why South County Art Association's Annual Holiday Pottery and Art Sale remains a staple of the holidays in Southern Rhode Island year after year. Featuring the work of more than 90 artists, this three-week event has provided generations of local families the perfect opportunity to find unique, often homemade gifts that come with a personal touch.

And after the coronavirus pandemic forced SCAA to postpone plans for the 2020 sale, organizers are hoping this year proves to not only a return to normal but a celebration worthy of honoring the milestone 50th anniversary of the beloved event.

"It's almost hard to fathom," Kathleen Carland, SCAA Executive Director said. "We're going into our 95th year next year as an organization and the sale has been going for 50 years. The first sale was in the '70s and as I've been hearing from people, it was just a few potters and not really an extensive event like it is now. It went for one or two weekends, now it goes for three weeks and we have almost 90 artists. I think they had like 10. But mainly it really helps us to really meet part of our mission which is really to promote artists. Artists are creating the most beautiful, wonderful things and if the community can't buy them or see them, where are they going to go with all this beauty?"

While the group scuttled plans for its annual sale in 2020 due to the pandemic, Carland said it did offer a couple of outdoor art sales throughout the year and sales were better than expected.

"Original art was very in last year," she said. "It's sort of a situation where people were stuck at home and they needed something to look at. The pandemic was good for art in some ways and bad for us in others."

Each year, SCAA staff and volunteers transform the historic Helme House Gallery into a dazzling holiday gift store, selling the work of artist members that range from talented hobbyists to seasoned professionals and come from all over the state of Rhode Island.

Thousands of visitors visit the sale annually to shop for one-ofa-kind items to be given as gifts or a present for themselves. The Holiday Sale has something for everyone on your list, including handmade pottery, cards, small framed prints, paintings, jewelry, ornaments, stocking stuffers and woodwork.

With nonstop news stories this year warning shoppers to plan their purchases in advance because of supply chain issues, Carland feels now is the best time for an event like SCAA's annual sale.

"The upcoming 50th anniversary holiday sale will prove once again that original art is always in style, tax free, supports artists and doesn't depend on the supply chain. That's kind of what we're looking at, just welcoming people and having them enjoy a peaceful and restful shopping experience that they can count on."

This year's Holiday Pottery and Art Sale opens on Friday, November 26 and runs until Sunday, December 19. The hours are Wednesdays-Sundays from 10 a.m.–6 p.m.

SCAA will also host a special "Meet the Artists" event on December 9 from 6-8 p.m.

"It's the most festive and dazzling display of beauty that you'll find anywhere," Carland said. "We have two historic buildings, they're completely decked out for the holidays. It's a magical place. We have sent some photographs but it doesn't do it justice. You take two galleries and a gift shop and you imagine it completely turned over to original art. It really is just a beautiful thing. People can buy small gifts, they can buy little ornaments, little sponge holders all the way up to some kind of beautiful painting. There's a price point for everyone in the community."

local catch IT TAKES A VILLAGE

Christmas comes but once a year and, when it comes to Christmas in Wickford, that means Santa, elves, music ... and the Festival of Lights.

If there's one thing the coronavirus pandemic instilled in all of us, it's that you can't take your holiday season and holiday traditions for granted.

Last year, one of the most disappointing announcements of the year for local families was that the Festival of Lights in Wickford would be devoid of any of its usual large-scale events.

But absence makes the heart grow fonder and this year, the festivities are back and better than ever.

The Wickford Village Association recently unveiled its plans for the 36th annual Festival of Lights and on tap are a ton of marquee events, whether you're a child just hoping to catch a glimpse of Santa, a teenager who wants to show off her best holiday costume or a parent who just needs a few minutes to take a relaxing stroll through town.

The four-day Festival of Lights officially kicks off Thursday, December 2 with North Kingstown's official town tree lighting and a guest appearance by Santa in Updike Park at 6 p.m.

On Friday, December 3, Santa will return to the village when he arrives by boat with Safe Sea to the town dock on Brown Street at 5:30 p.m. led by the kayaking and paddle boarding "reindeer" of the Kavak Centre.

That evening, from 6-8 p.m., Santa will lead horse-drawn havrides throughout Wickford Village at a cost of $3 per person (cash only, masks required.) Can't make it to the havrides Friday? Don't fret. Santa will be on site Saturday and Sunday from 1-4 p.m. for the rides as well.

Also Saturday, the village welcomes all to dress in their "elfiest attire" and meet at 11 a.m. at Sweet Marie's Tea Cottage, located at 25 West Main Street. for an elves' reception of hot cocoa and cookies before the group marches in the annual elf parade through Wickford at noon.

For more information on this year's Festival of Lights, visit wickfordvillage.org.

Wickford Village will kick off the holiday celebrations in Southern Rhode Island in style this year as the 36th annual Festival of Lights returns December 2-5.

There are few things more stressful enchanting themes, with items for sale in every price range. The public will get to view and buy hundreds of unique creative stained glass and fused glass pieces that are functional or decorative, or both and can also learn about classes offered at the studio and see workspaces while talking with students about methods and materials.

> For Peggy Corcoran, owner of Bosgraaf Studio, the annual holiday sale is a great event for both students and the public alike.

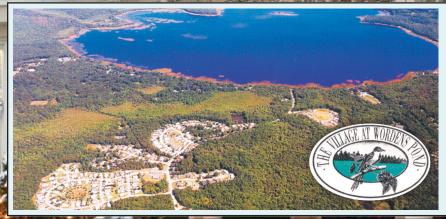

> "We're very excited," she said. "I think this year is going to be the biggest year."

Corcoran works with her students in a very hands-on way for the sale, ensuring they put out high quality items and gain real-world experience with things like pricing and figuring out how to "anticipate what people want and what they're looking for for holiday gifts."

This year's holiday sale, which is free to the public, features a complimentary hot chocolate bar, a special wine tasting from Gooseneck Vineyards from 1-3 p.m. on Saturday and a raffle that will be drawn on Sunday.

Inspired by the loss of a friend, North Kingstown resident Ali Hornung made it her mission to gift an American Girl Doll to every child battling cancer. This holiday season, Hornung and her Glimmer of Hope Foundation hope to get step closer to making that goal a reality.

Story by Jessica Abbiati Kut NORT POLE IC OVERNI GHT DEL reindeer exp. WERNI OVERNIGHT ER DO NOTOL BEFOR 250ECENBEL ORE PLEASE DELIVER ENCLOSED PRESENTS TO: TO: GLIMMER OF HOPE FOUNDATION TO: GLIMMER OF CLIMMER OF HOPE FOUNDATIC

Last Christmas, the Glimmer of Hope Foundation teamed up with local police and the Maddie Potts Foundation to send 30 full-sized sacks of toys to Hasbro Children's Hospital's oncology wing. The group also helped sponsor three families in three states with a full slate of Christmas presents.

The Glimmer of Hope Foundation says it sponsors and donates bald dolls of four ethnicities to "better help children feel represented and confident" during their fight against cancer.

rom an early age, Ali Hornung of North Kingstown made it her mission to bring joy to children battling cancer. At just 12 years old, she asked her parents to help her create a hair accessory business where the funds would go to benefit pediatric cancer. From there Hornung became a passionate advocate for these children and has continued to bring smiles and hope to them ever since. Hornung's ultimate inspiration, however, came a few years after she began her journey into pediatric cancer advocacy. Eleven-yearold Ella, who was battling leukemia, was just an acquaintance until one day when Hornung invited her to participate in a fashion show event. The two girls then became inseparable.

Hornung became like a big sister to Ella. She started going to chemo and physical therapy with her, and their bond deepened. Ella was in remission for about 10 months after completing her initial two and a half years of treatment. Unfortunately, she relapsed in April of 2019 at 14 years old and died in August of that same year.

"My passion was already sparked, but Ella forged that path for me because she was amazing. She was truly inspiring," said Hornung.

About a year after Ella's death, Hornung approached her parents and told them that she wanted to start a nonprofit in honor of their daughter. She respectfully asked them what they would like their daughter's legacy to be. They explained how Ella wrote to the American Girl company and asked them to send a bald American Girl Doll to every child battling cancer. Ella received such a doll after sending that letter and named her Hope. From young Ella's inspiring legacy, the Glimmer of Hope Foundation was created.

Since the foundation was launched a year and a half ago, they have impacted over 400 individuals and their families. Glimmer of Hope sends bald American Girl Dolls to children battling cancer, wellness packages to them and their families as well as bereavement gifts to parents who have lost a child to cancer.

Last Christmas — with the support of local police and The Maddie Potts Foundation — the foundation sent 30 fullsized Santa sacks to the oncology wing at Hasbro Children's Hospital. They also supported three families — one in Rhode Island, one in New Jersey and one in Georgia — for Christmas by sending gifts to not only a child battling cancer but their siblings as well. Each child received 15 to 20 gifts and a full stocking to open on Christmas morning.

"When we first started Glimmer of Hope we weren't always in a position to give to siblings, but now that we are I realized that siblings are a huge part of the journey of childhood cancer and that's something that I really wanted to include," said Hornung.

Three new families will be chosen this year to receive Christmas gifts from Glimmer of Hope.

This holiday season the Glimmer of Hope Foundation is hosting 24 Days of Dolls. This campaign aims to send one bald American Girl Doll to a child battling cancer each day leading up to Christmas in December. Funding for the dolls comes primarily through special doll sponsors. Anyone can make a donation of $135 to Glimmer of Hope and become a Doll Sponsor. The foundation then posts a photo of the child who received the doll and credits the donor as the doll sponsor. The foundation also receives many generous donations from the local community.

"We've just been very fortunate to have a very supportive community," said Hornung.

Hornung is a senior at the University of Rhode Island and is pursuing a triple major in global business, German, and human development & family sciences.

MALL THE FIXINGS

With hard-to-find items and the kind of customer service you can't find online, the Wakefield Mall remains one step ahead of its competition all year long ... but especially during the holiday season.

JENNIFER'S CHOCOLATES

CHOCOLATES

Santa Claus, aka Terry Simpson, helps Jennifer Dowell, owner of Jennifer's Chocolates in the Wakefield Mall, make chocolate lollipops during his recent visit to the mall. For business owners like Dowell, who has operated out of the location for 25 years, the Wakefield Mall is the perfect balance between a traditional mall — and its steady volume of foot traffic — and smaller, intimate shopping centers which allow more one-on-one customer interaction.

ennifer Dowell has been at the Wakefield Mall — a classic throwback to the 1970s-style indoor shopping centers — for over 25 years. She makes and bakes and sells chocolates of all kinds.

Her business, "Jennifer's Chocolates," is right inside the main tall glass doors greeting anyone coming from a large nearby parking lot. This small mall, a large retail fixture in South Kingstown, is near the crest of Old Tower Hill Road, just before the Route 1 overpass.

"It's so convenient and has stores that people like to visit and they don't need to even go north on Route 1. They have it right here," said Larry Fish, the mall manager of over 35 years and chairman of the town's Economic Development Committee.

Dowell said that she agrees and that's one of the reasons she's kept her storefront here, where some days only a few people walk along its single-level and short concourse while at other times it bustles with folks poking around more than 15 stores (wakefieldmall.com/directory) inside.

Like several other store owners, Dowell says that the chief attractiveness is the congenial community of businesses creating a special atmosphere of friendliness among themselves and for their customers.

This special attitude keeps customers coming, they say, whether holiday shoppers, summer tourists or locals wanting to stay in town to avoid crowds at other larger malls more than 20 miles away.

Margie Cornwall of Narragansett shopped at the Wakefield Mall one recent afternoon. She goes to grocery giant Shaws in the complex as well as The Paper Store offering eclectic greeting cards and other small gifts, toys, jewelry and clothing.

"This mall is more quaint than the big malls. I get lost in the big malls," said Cornwall, who also said that she's been going to the Wakefield Mall for "a lot of years."

Deborah Lysik of Narragansett said she's been going to the mall for more than 15 years. She likes to browse around the stores and will walk around it a few times a month.

At Christmas time, this indoor arcade of shops brings a warmth from both friendly surroundings as well as protection from cold ocean winds outside in the fall, winter and early spring, said customers and other retailers in Wakefield.

A Community Holiday Anchor

Fish, who owns Pier Cleaners, pulls from his long-time association with this shopping center, a list of many contributions that have come as a result this retail hub's location in South County.

"For example, Santa comes here every year. The mall pays for him to be brought by helicopter and if that's not possible due to weather, it arranges for the fire department to bring him by fire truck," Fish said about one of its main Christmas holiday attractions.

The visit is also planned again for this year, he added.

In addition, he said, the holiday season offers an opportunity for local non-profit organizations to fundraise by wrapping gifts with multi-colored paper and bows attached with tape or ribbons and cut into neat shapes with the necessary scissors, all supplied by the mall.

Then there's the holiday decorations at the mall for those wanting a small and local treat.

Going inside for a walk among them brings a welcome respite, say some visitors, for squinting eyes that stare too much and too long at online shopping sites. These have been overtaking malls like this one and others around the county as well as the once ever-important community Main Streets that featured small and department stores of all kinds.

"People really like to come here and see them. There's something traditional about it, especially at a mall that still has a small-town atmosphere and feel to it as well as so much a part of the town's history," Fish said.

Its Size and Beginning

Labelscar, an online retail history blog, wrote in 2006 about the mall, "We love tiny malls. Maybe it's because there's a thrill in hunting them; they're stealthy and low-profile, hard to catch and rarely documented on the internet. The International Council of Shopping Centers generally ignores them. They're fun little surprises, and some of them go undetected by us for years even in well-worn territories."

"The Wakefield Mall," the author added, "is a bit different because it's in my home state, which is also really tiny. What a perfect pair!"

The blog went on to note that "more interesting than its size is the sheer awesomeness of that logo and facade! Located in the middle of the suburban shopping district of Wakefield, itself just a village located in the larger town of South Kingstown, this aging and tiny center serves the upmarket farthest-south Providence suburbs."

The vision for this enduring retail icon in South Kingstown formed in the early 1970s in the eyes of Irving Levy, a Massachusetts business entrepreneur, whose son, Geoffrey, now 74, has continued as owner and preservationist of the plaza. It is the only one of its kind in South County, claims Fish.

That may be true, despite whether other plazas say they also offer something indoors, because this one has withstood tests of time, development, businesses shuffling in and out, economic upturns and downward cycles and now a once-in-one-hundredyear pandemic.

"It opened in 1972. It's hard to believe where the time has gone. It's just happened," Levy told South County Life during a recent interview.

Yet, this man has managed to hold on to this mall, has avoided selling it, despite offers and inquiries about potential sale for property or business, and says he has no plans to let go. He's even making plans to keep it going, said Fish, when this owner's time comes to step aside.

"The nice thing about Wakefield," said Levy, "is that I've been able to get some really wonderful people to take stores there, who you can deal with. It's not like you get a recording when you call their office, you get the person."

It's a sentiment that reflects that feeling of community the tenant business owners have mentioned. It's all about community, said Levy, who until the COVID pandemic hit, would personally hand-deliver to South Kingstown's tax collector his quarterly real estate tax payments.

"I liked seeing people, connecting with them, checking on whether anything was needed," he said about a routine that could have easily been done by mail, online payments when they became possible or even Fish hand-carrying it.

Kelly Silva, manager of The Paper Store for the last 11 years, tells about camaraderie — not competition — among businesses sideby-side and an attitude that extends to the customers they all share, she added.

"It's a community of our customers as well. We see several people here many times a week. We now know them on a firstname basis," she said.

Meg Rodrigue, manager at POW! Science! store for three years, said the same.

"The locals come to support us and call us for things. Everybody watches out for each other," she said. When Dowell heard about that remark, she laughed.

"If I need a ladder, I'll go over to The Paper Store to borrow one. I don't have one and they gladly give it to me," Dowell said, as a woman stepped to her counter from the corner hallway. "Can I borrow some ribbon. I'll take black or whatever color you have," the visitor said.

Wakefield Books in the Wakefield Mall is celebrating its 10th anniversary this year and offers book lovers a chance to browse the stacks and find new and exciting offerings in a way that isn't possible by shopping online.

Dowell pulled some from a roll used for tying any of the variety of balloons she sells — along with chocolates — marking birthdays, anniversaries, weddings and any other holiday or occasion someone is celebrating.

"Thanks!," the woman said, walking away. Dowell then explained, "She's from Planet Fitness and they are having a grand opening tonight." The gym recently welcomed patrons to this newest exercise location in large open-space section of the mall.

At Wakefield Books, a special history unfolds. When mall tenant Walden Books closed, Levy exercised a contract option to obtain fixtures. He then bought inventory and invited the store manager – Bob Ryan – to be a partner in a new store called Wakefield Books.

He preserved, said employees, jobs and a store. Levy said the reason was simple, "Every community should have a bookstore."

Susan Martin, who has worked at the bookstore since 1984, gazed out to the mall's main concourse. "It's a little mall, but it packs a powerful punch."

Holiday gift giving is about so much more than buying presents. It's the thought that counts and, when it comes to finding the most thoughtful gifts for your friends and family members in South County, there's really nothing like shopping local.

Story by Jessica Abbiati, Photography by Michael Derr

It's a classic scene: falling snow, warm streetlights, bustling streets and ringing bells. A walk downtown to find the perfect, unique gift for everyone on your list is a quintessential holiday experience. Plus, supporting local businesses leaves an impact that is felt by your entire community.

Shopping local is vital throughout the year, but the holidays provide a special chance to patron local businesses. Kristin Urbach, executive director of the North Kingstown Chamber of Commerce, said, "we encourage everyone to shop locally not only during the holiday season, but as often as possible. When you buy local, more money is retained in the community; you are supporting local job creation and making a community investment." She continued, saying, "the shops in town offer unique items that shows the character of our community. This uniqueness you can't find online."

If you think about it, when you shop local you are not simply paying for a good or service. You are helping employees — who will support other local businesses — get paid, thus bolstering the local economy and helping South County stay vibrant.

Joe Viele, executive director of the Southern Rhode Island Chamber of Commerce, said "there's a whole flow from [shopping locally]. A down river

For South County residents, the holiday season offers a wide variety of options for shopping locally. Teddy Bearskins has three locations in the area and its Wickford shop offers a variety of designer children's clothes such as these Mayoral outfits.

Hema Bulmer, owner of POW! Science! in the Wakefield Mall holds one of the many engineering kits offered at the toy store. For nearly 20 years, Pow! Science! has been a unique business in Southern Rhode Island, in that it specializes in toys that both entertain and educate children. Pow! Science! has toys in categories ranging from brainteasers and games to science and nature and even products designed for sensory learning and imaginative play.

flow where money that's spent at the restaurant then goes to pay the waitress who buys something for her kids at Pow! Science! and so on. There's a compounding effect that's immeasurable. As shoppers we should support our local businesses first because they employee our neighbors and our neighbors in turn shop local."

Additionally, with the ripple effects of the pandemic still being felt, supporting local businesses is vital to their recovery and survival.

Lisa Konicki, president of the Ocean Community Chamber of Commerce, said, "staying loyal to local is more important now than ever. Small businesses in our community are still recovering from losses experienced due to COVID and the ongoing effect it has. We're asking everyone to shop the great, unique collections offered in our region and show their love to local shops."

Shopping local truly contributes to the overall vitality of your town and makes it the uniquely wonderful place it is. Shopping local has an immediate, tangible effect.

Steve Lombardi, executive director of the East Greenwich Chamber of Commerce, said, "small businesses are the backbone and the fabric of our community. They add so much to our town's quality of life."

With such an array of local shops and businesses to choose from you are sure to find the perfect gift for everyone on your list right here in South County.

Arnold Lumber in Wakefield is just one of many local companies who have a planned giving program during the holidays. Each year, Arnold Lumber collects toys throughout its five locations in Rhode Island and brings them to a central location on the Arnold family's old sleigh for donation to the Jonnycake Center's "Hope for the Holidays" initiative.

SECRETSANTAS

The holidays are a time of joy and laughter but, for poorer local families, they're also a time of struggle. In Southern Rhode Island, the call for help is never louder, or answered more fiercely by unheralded heroes, than when it matters most.

or Erika Castaneda, a local preschool teacher, life hasn't been easy over the years, especially when providing gifts for her only child at Christmas.

Finances have been tight, something a single-mother like her gets familiar with. Yet, there's still the tug to want to provide her son with the same kind of joy from getting presents that other kids – those from more well-off families – feel.

For Sherry Hawkins, who is homeless and lives in campgrounds in the summer and a borrowed mobile home for the winter, the challenge is also steep for providing gifts at Christmas to her children.

There are other families, too, who experience the same turmoil at the holidays – parents whose self-esteem takes a beating because what they want to give to their kids and what they can give is so vastly different.

"Christmas is so much more harder for lowincome people because the pressure is so much greater this one time of year when their kids expect to get that they want at Christmas," said Kate Brewster, executive director of the Jonnycake Center for Hope in Peace Dale.

It serves as a place for refuge for food, clothing, rental assistance, guidance in tough times, a friendly ear or voice and an inspiration for hope among many individuals and families who don't have money for the basics.

These people cannot, as many others do, simply charge to a credit card, whip out some cash at the checkout or glide a pen across a check with ease and comfort knowing the funds are available.

So, who is Santa to the poor in South Kingstown and Narragansett?

Many who are Santa of scores of individuals, companies, churches, small businesses and major corporations that funnel toys, clothes and gift cards to her for her annual "Hope for the Holidays" program.

"I can't specify one gift" that's been important to her son and that's come from Brewster's program, said Castaneda of South Kingstown.

"It's all of them. I wouldn't be able to give him half what they gave him," she said, adding, "With personal financial struggles, these past few years I've really needed the help."

Hawkins said, "Last Christmas it was a very big help. Honestly, if the Jonnycake Center didn't step up, my kids wouldn't have had good Christmas. I could do a little, but not a lot."

Taking a look at the Jonnycake Center through the lens of the Christmas classic, "It's a Wonderful Life" where someone's influence is shown so clearly, life without the Jonnycake Center and this program would be so much harder, both women said.

"It would just make more of struggle than it is for me, and my son wouldn't have been able to have the many wonderful Christmases he has had," Castaneda said, echoing Hawkins' sentiments.

These women and others getting the benefit of the program, Brewster said, comes because many organizations and individuals contribute to the program that is now a community rallying point for helping others who are struggling, especially at the Christmas holiday time.

"It's a growing community effort, which is really needed, because if you really want to serve 500 kids, and make sure they get the basics and plus a little extra, it takes a lot," Brewster explained.

How It Works

"Hope for the Holidays" started about five years ago, shortly after Brewster took over as executive director of the Jonnycake Center. Until that point, many organizations were doing individual toy drives, clothing collections and other efforts to help the needy, she explained.

"Some people came to us and asked if we'd organize it and be a central collection and distribution point," she said.

Since that time, the number of participating organizations has grown from 20 to more than 75 while the children served have remained roughly about 500, representing about 220 families in the area, she said.

The families sign up at the center to participate. Many are already members of the Jonnycake center, but others do join around this time of the year, Brewster said.

For the companies, such as Arnold Lumber in Wakefield, it's a planned giving program and the company has never want to disappoint the people seeking the help, said Michelle Swain, the company's marketing director.

Hundreds of toys come to the center atop a flatbed lumber truck and with Santa riding inside the Arnold family's old sleigh. Tony Jarvis, the company manager at "The Branch" location in downtown Wakefield, brought the company into this outreach program, she said.

Toys this program are collected from Arnold Lumber's five locations throughout the state. These include donations from employees as well as customers. This year, Swain said, employees will also be asked to consider a cash donation from an internal fundraising appeal called "Dress for a Cause."

With a $5-to-$10 donation, employees wear a certain color for a day. On December 15 it will be red and green, signifying the upcoming holiday, and all donations will go to the Jonnycake Center for Hope, Swain said.

Another special delivery last year came by ambulance. It was packed with toys collected by South Kingstown emergency services personnel, Brewster said.

Sometimes getting the right mix of gift items for those eligible for the program – infants to 18 years-old – can be tricky, the executive director said.

"We're really good for the kids three years-old to 10 years-old, and then it gets harder with teens, so we try to give families with other children more gift cards," she added.

She pointed out that those in need will make selections of toys, clothes and coats during the first two weeks of December. In addition, the center will give out gift cards – last year the total value exceeded $40,000.

It all will take place at the center's thrift shop on Kingstown Road in Peace Dale.

Nearly half of low-income Americans reported that they or someone in their household experienced some type of income loss during the pandemic, according to information published by Pew Research Center.

Because more people are facing hardship this year due to the impacts of COVID-19 and persistence of its variants, more families will likely be in need of assistance in 2021, according to reports by Michael French and PR Newswire giving a heads up to companies about the continued need for giving.

Organizations like The Salvation Army estimate it could serve up to 155% more people with Christmas assistance, assuming the resources are available, based on increased services already provided during the pandemic. In order to aid those most vulnerable, nonprofit organizations across the nation need help, it said.

Every Christmas there are families who don't exchange gifts because they can't afford them. However, many communities nationally offer programs that rely on donations to put new clothes and toys under the tree for children and families that usually go without Christmas gifts, it reported.

And that is the focus this year again for this local group that, in many ways, symbolizes a national issue.

"Our gifts are modest," Brewster said, adding, "but people leave, I think, pretty satisfied."

Affluence versus Needy

Many who donate at Christmas for the needy observed that a strong spirit of Christmas – giving without an expectation of receiving - is the wonderful part of leading drives or making donations.

In a previous interview with South County Life magazine, three Santa Clauses reflected on talking with kids from different economic backgrounds.

Gifts sometimes take on outsized roles in affluent families, said Peter Murgia, of Coventry, Jim Clarke of Warwick and Terry Simpson of South Kingstown.

Murgia said that from his chair he definitely sees the difference that affluence can bring to a view toward the spirit of Christmas.

New clothing is always a welcome donation for the "Hope for the Holidays" program, especially as the temperatures drop and the need for quality hats, sweaters, gloves and jackets increases.

more than an average share of money, know they will get whatever they want. But, you treat that child the same way no matter what kind of background they have," he said.

"It is, however, a different feel when you're with them," he said. Simpson and "Kids from well-to-do homes, those with Clarke gave a resounding "Yes," looking a Murgia in this candid conversation of things Santas never say from the sleigh.

Clarke said, "I get the sense that they could ask for almost anything from Santa and they know they're going to get it."

"There are those who say they want computers and cell phones. I tell them those are gifts from mom and dad because they give out gifts, too. Santa brings them gifts that they can play with," he said.

Brewster said that she so easily sees the comparison with those families she helps.

"Families we work with have serous circumstances. They work low-wage jobs, such as nursing homes, hospitality, retail, and live paycheck to paycheck," she said.

"And then the expectation of Christmas comes along. Their kids have wants and desires just like any other kids," she said.

"They want the same things other kids want. They want sneakers, electronics and video games and their parents desperately want to give them that . So the pressure is extreme," Brewster said with a sigh.
