Dave and Marcia Lesinski named 76th Perchville Royalty

EAST TAWAS – The Tawas Area Chamber of Commerce (TACC) has announced that Dave and Marcia Lesinski are the King and Queen of the 76th annual Perchville USA.

Both lifelong residents of the Tawases, the Lesinski's embody the community spirit, volunteerism, and leadership that define Perchville Royalty.

Dave and Marcia first met in high school, and both graduated from Tawas Area High School. They were married in 1973 and together raised two daughters, Kimberly and Michelle. Their family has since grown to include six grandchildren and three great grandchildren.

The Lesinski's are the owners of Great Lakes Insurance Agency in Tawas City, which they have operated since 2002. The property where Great Lakes Insurance stands holds a special place in Marcia's family history.

Her family purchased the corner lot in 1927. Today, that same property is where the iconic large American flag is proudly displayed.

Through Great Lakes Insurance Agency, Dave and Marcia have also been generous sponsors of numerous community events, supporting local initiatives year after year.

Dave currently serves on the Tawas City Council and has held numerous leadership roles over the years, including with the

Lesneski, Danek announced as 2026 Perchville Junior Royalty

EAST TAWAS – The Tawas Area Chamber of Commerce (TACC) has announced that Colton Lesneski and Kinsley Danek will be the 2026 Perchville Junior King and Junior Queen, representing the 76th Annual Perchville celebration.

Lesneski is a seventh grade student at Tawas Area Schools. He is the son of John and Krista Lesneski and has an older sister, Gia, and a younger sister, Mila. Colton's family also includes three dogs – Bodie, Stella and Bruno.

Lesneski enjoys staying active through sports, including soccer, basketball and golf, and also likes playing the guitar. His favorite subjects in school are literature and math. He is actively involved at Holy Family Church, as well, where he serves as an altar server and helps with Bible school and youth group activities.

A devoted sports fan, Lesneski supports FC Barcelona for soccer, the Boston Celtics for basketball, University of Michigan football and Oakland University basketball. He hopes to follow in his father's footsteps one day, and become a dentist.

Some of Lesneski's favorite Perchville memories, include the festival's "Chilly" Cook-Off and watching the magician performances at the Family Expo.

Danek is a sixth grade student at Tawas Area Schools. She is the daughter of Sarah and David Danek and has a brother, Pierce.

Danek has been playing hockey since the age of 2, and currently plays defense for the Midland Hornets, wearing jersey number 44. In addition to hockey, she enjoys basketball, cross country and soccer. Her favorite subjects in school are science and physical education.

Danek dreams of continuing her hockey career at the collegiate level – with hopes of attending either Central Michigan University or the University of Michigan – while also pursuing her goal of becoming a doctor who works with babies, either as a pediatrician or OB-GYN.

The public was invited to attend the breakfast, which was hosted at the East Tawas American Legion. Doors are opened at 9:30 a.m., and the crowning will begin at 10 a.m. As noted by those from the TACC, only a $10 Perchville button was required for entry.

The 2026 festival royalty – which also includes King and Queen, Dave and Marica Lesinski, who were featured in a recent edition of this publication – will be celebrated during the Perchville Royal Feast, as well. The event has been scheduled for Thursday, Feb. 5, 2026, and will take place at the Gallery Venue by Branham's.

TACC representatives have congratulated Lesneski and Danek on being named as the latest Junior Royalty, and say that they look forward to seeing the students represent Perchville throughout the upcoming festivities.

community events, including Perchville fish fries and the coronation breakfast. One of his favorite Perchville memories is participating in the demolition derby—an experience he remembers as "a lot of fun."

Marcia has long matched Dave's dedication to community service. Often working alongside him in the Knights of Columbus kitchen, baking cakes, washing dishes, or helping serve, she has also been active with the Tawas Boosters Club, served as a Brownie leader, volunteered on the Chamber's Light Up the Bay committee, assisted the Tawas DDA, supported Mariner Fest, and helps with Holy Family Nursing Home ministries. She also helps place American flags along US-23, and her family continues the tradition of organizing and displaying the iconic large flag on their historic property, as well as carrying it proudly in the Fourth of July parade.

Marcia cherishes her memories of serving Perchville meals at the Knights Hall and loves seeing the community come together in celebration.

Despite their many accomplishments, neither Dave nor Marcia has ever sought recognition. In their interview, they expressed how deeply they believe in giving back to the community that has given so much to them. Their lives reflect genuine generosity, leadership, and service – qualities that make them outstanding examples of Perchville Royalty.

The TACC congratulated Dave and Marcia on being named the 2026 Perchville USA King and Queen. Their lifelong dedication to the Tawases continues to enrich the community and inspire those around them.

The 2025 Royalty, Ray and Jennifer Bruning, officially crowned Dave and Marcia at the Coronation Breakfast on Saturday, Jan. 31. The breakfast took place at the American Legion in East Tawas, and only a $10 Perchville button was required for entrance.

Take a dive into winter!

If you live in northeast Michigan, you most likely enjoy winter outdoor activities of one sort or another. And the next couple of months or so will offer the best chances to get out into the elements and enjoy your favorite sport.

February and March often provide some of the best skiing, snowboarding, snowmobiling and ice fishing of the winter season. But winter also comes with a word of caution: Don't forget about safety – especially when it involves getting out onto the ice of local waters. Ice on Tawas Bay, as well as inland lakes and rivers, can potentially be dangerous to venture onto and one should always exercise caution.

With the 75th rendition of Perchville USA set for the Tawases this weekend the best of winter is yet to come. We invite you to get outside and jump right into winter before it's over. Besides, the water's just fine!

Historian shares stories of first Perchville

TAWAS — In January 1950, an unnamed Iosco County News reporter wrote, "Weather permitting, Tawas Perchville, a colorful array of fishing shanties, will become a reality on the ice of Tawas Bay Saturday."

Seventy-six years later, the popular festival — which started by the suggestion of an area businessman to spur the local economy — is still going strong and is a highly anticipated yearly event.

The 76th annual celebration began with a weekend of events, starting Jan. 31 with the annual Coronation Breakfast held at the American Legion. Perchville's full schedule of events is included in this special edition.

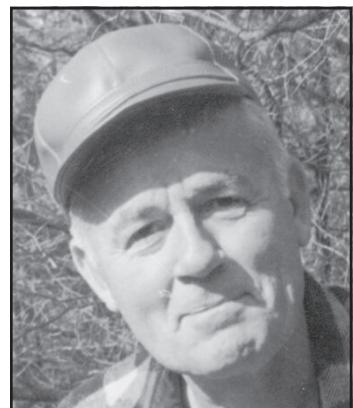

According to the late area historian Neil Thornton, the event started after area businessman Harold L. Gould pitched an idea to the area chamber of commerce in the fall of 1949.

Thornton, an area newspaperman, publisher, life-long resident and author of 16 books on the history of the area, witnessed many of the events first-hand.

Gould's idea was to construct a town on the ice of Tawas Bay, to bring tourists and fishermen to town and to give area businesses a booster shot during a depressed winter economy.

Area businesses built shanties resembling their shops — complete with gas heaters — and the structures were laid out on the ice over "good fishing grounds," according to the newspaper account.

The shanties, which numbered from 25 to 30 during

FISH-EYE VIEW — This iconic Life Magazine ice fishing photo was done by freelance photographer Joe Clark — known as the Hillbilly Snapshooter — during the first Perchville in 1950. the first week, were open to fishermen who wanted to use them free of charge, minus a $5 deposit, which was returned.

The first newspaper account of the event was merely a sidebar to the huge amount of space area reporters would use in covering the time-honored event in later days.

But in 1950, the unnamed reporter's enthusiasm couldn't predict the popularity and the growth the festival would take as the decades progressed, despite the shantytown being destroyed by high winds several times that first year.

"It is possible," the story went on to state, "as soon as the program gets underway, a 'Perchville Mayor' may be elected to rule over the ice community."

A later newspaper account lamented the loss of the town and the stymied attempt to elect a mayor.

But despite the setbacks to the festival caused by Mother Nature, the first festival was a huge success.

Reservations, according to newspaper accounts, were coming in from as far away as Ann Arbor and Chicago and the number of shanties reached 37. It was everything organizers could do to keep fresh bait flowing into the shanties to catch the huge and abundant perch.

The public clamored to rent the fishing shacks, with the Tawases garnering national attention after a broadcast by NBC.

The event had stretched into weeks when a photographer from Life Magazine showed up to chronicle the event.

In 1950, Thornton was just a 21-year-old reporter and photographer for his father, P.N. Thornton's newspaper, the Tawas Herald.

He said, at the time, there was much excitement over Perchville, which was part of the beloved and very popular Silver Valley Winter Sports Festival, which was heavily reported for weeks at a time.

"Everyone thought it was just a great idea," he said on the Perchville aspect of the festival. And after a story about the little town on the ice was printed in the Bay City Times — a story that was eventually picked up by the Associated Press and published across the country — Perchville drew the attention of Life Magazine.

Thornton said the magazine hired famous photographer Joe Clark, who was known as the "Hillbilly Snapshooter," to come and get a perch photo from the fish's point of view.

Thornton, with access to one of the town's only darkrooms, was employed by Clark to assist with the photo. According to Thornton, Clark thought he could achieve the photograph by lowering a Rolleiflex camera encased in a plastic bag under the water.

It wouldn't work and a wooden rig with a glass window was constructed by an area furniture builder. Thornton said flash bulbs were rigged to the camera and suspended under the water, and a perch was put on a tether to achieve the photo.

After the initial photo was taken, Clark sent Thornton to the Herald's darkroom to develop the photo, joining him later after a couple more shots.

Weeks later, Clark would return with an improved underwater rig, constructed from a pretzel tin, and an iconic Perchville photograph — with two children gazing down into an ice hole at a wriggling perch — was achieved.

Thornton said the event was significant to him, as a young photographer who would eventually work in journalism as a soldier during the Korean War. Another aspect was having Life Magazine in the Tawases.

In 1950, Thornton said, one could not pick up a single television station and the magazine was an outlet to the outside world.

In 1964, after a winter of warmer than average temperatures, Thornton said the winter sports carnival was cancelled in February.

But although interest in Silver Valley was waning, Perchville was getting bigger, with reports of shanties in the hundreds on the ice.

Organizers decided to hold Perchville as an event in and of itself in the beginning of March. The event was successful, according to accounts, though a large amount of water on the bay ice wreaked havoc, according to Thornton.

It was in 1966 that a Perchville tradition was born, the first polar bear swim at the event. According to a News story, Harry McElyea of Flint came to Tawas Bay weeks before the event to test the water and gave a performance, swimming in Tawas Bay at Perchville.

He did it again the following year, Thornton said, and by the third year hundreds were taking the plunge.

DNR: Ice fishing is the 'Coolest Sport Around'

LANSING – For many people, fishing is the most relaxing way to spend the day. And, according to the Michigan Department of Natural Resources (DNR), in the winter months the most popular angling activity is ice fishing. To those who have never tried it, ice fishing is sometimes looked upon as an oddity, but for others, ice fishing is the best kind of fishing.

Although it doesn't appeal to all, many anglers actually prefer fishing through the ice to open-water fishing. For one thing, anglers can get just about anywhere on the lake during ice fishing season, something they can't do without a boat during the open water season. Virtually every fish that's available to anglers in the summer can be caught through the ice – some are even caught more frequently in the winter, the DNR said.

Once you've spent a little time on the ice, you'll soon see a different picture. Ice fishing is more than just a way to fill the long days of winter. It's a chance to breathe the cold, clean winter air, to spend quiet time outdoors with family and friends, and to relax and collect one's thoughts away from the hustle and bustle of a busy world.

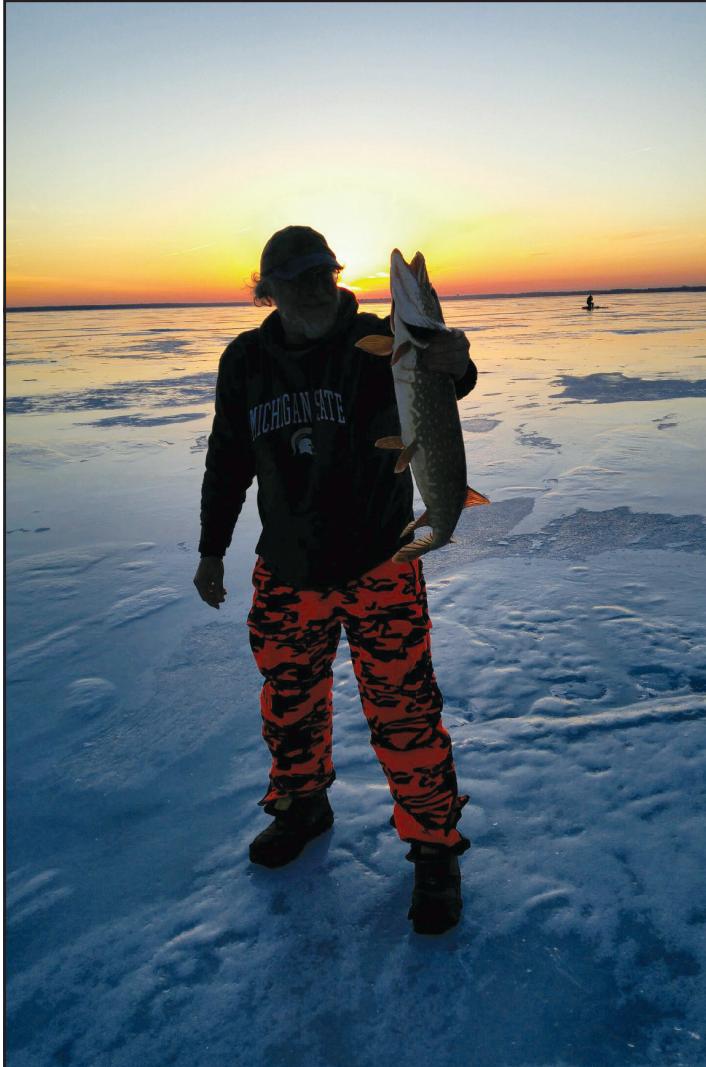

Just walking on the ice can be a unique experience, especially when no snow obscures the view of the water below. However, as with any outdoor activity, safety should be your top concern. When it comes to ice safety, you should steer clear of dark spots or places where the snow looks discolored.

The DNR said some other good rules to follow include:

- Never fish alone.
- Tell someone where you are going and when you expect to return.
- Always test the ice with a spud (described later).
- Take the appropriate emergency items, such as a lifejacket and ice picks.
- Take a cell phone with you in case you need to call for help. Dress in your warmest winter clothes; fill a thermos with hot coffee, chocolate or tea; and bring an empty bucket or old lawn chair to sit on.

To get started ice fishing, you'll need the basics: something to make a hole in the ice, something to clear the hole and keep it open and ice free, and something to fish with, or equipment.

The two basic tools used to make holes in the ice are spuds and augers. A spud features a long-shank with a chisel-like end that's used to chip a hole in the ice. A spud is a tool you use when the ice isn't too thick. An auger is a corkscrew-like device with a cutting blade that operates like a hand drill to make a hole in the ice. For extremely thick ice, power augers that run on batteries or small gasoline engines are available and make creating holes much easier.

Once the hole is created it needs to be cleared of ice chips or slush. A skimmer (or a slush scoop) is a small cup with holes in it (to let the water run out) on a long handle. It is inexpensive and perfectly suited for the job. A skimmer is used to clear the hole right after it's made, as well as throughout the day if it's particularly cold and if additional ice forms.

Note the size of the hole is important. The hole must be big enough that you can get a fish out, but not too large of a hole that it may endanger someone's life. Anglers are recommended to keep their holes to a maximum of eight to 10 inches in diameter which would accommodate the size of most fish species. When abandoning fishing holes, anglers should mark them with a tree branch, sticks or chunks of ice to alert others of their presence.

Ice fishing equipment can be divided into three basic categories: hook-and-line, tip-ups and spears.

Most hook-and-line anglers use short, limber rods with reels or simple spring-tension spools to hold the line. Sometimes they may use something as simple as a couple of pegs on the rod handle used to wrap the line around. Limber rods allow the use of light line, which usually results in better fishing and absorbs more of the shock when fighting fish.

Hook-and-line anglers use live bait, artificial lures or sometimes both to catch many different species of fish. Anglers often use small lures, such as teardrops or flies, with live bait – such as wax worms (bee moth larva), spikes (fly larvae), wigglers (mayfly larvae) or minnows – attached to the hook for better action. The bait can be fished without movement or jigging can be used to attract the fish. Jigging is most successful if a lure of any kind is used.

Hook-and-line anglers have the choice of using a bobber on the line, just as they would while fishing in the summer. Some may also fish with a tight line and use a spring bobber, which is a small strip of metal or wire that extends off the rod tip like an additional eye on the rod. Any motion alerts anglers to the bite, a bonus for small fish or light-biters. Generally, anglers begin by fishing near the bottom and work their way up in the water column until they locate the fish, then continue to fish at that same depth. Anglers can use bobbers to set their baits at a preferred depth or fish a tight line, either fishing without movement or jigging.

For bigger fish, anglers use heavier gear with larger lures or bigger hooks which allows them to use larger baits – minnows, smelt, salmon eggs or spawn bags. Anglers generally start at the bottom and gradually move up in the water column when jigging, while those fishing with live bait, spawn bags or salmon eggs generally fish right off the bottom.

Some anglers prefer to fish with tip-ups, which are devices set on the ice above the hole that dangle the bait (most often minnows) beneath them. Tip-ups, which feature small reels submerged in the water, get their name from a flag that's bent over and attached to the reel. When a fish takes the bait, the reel turns and releases not only line, but the flag as well. The flags' "tip up" action alerts the angler to the fish taking out line. Tip-ups are usually spooled with heavy, braided line. Often an angler who is fishing with a rod will also set a tip-up in a different hole, giving them two ways to catch a fish and giving them an opportunity to fish for different species, or more than one fish, or at two different but close by locations.

Spearing is another form of ice fishing that is a more specialized but traditional sport. Anglers who spear cut large holes in the ice, usually with an ice saw or chain saw. They fish from tents or small shelters commonly called shanties that can be portable or more permanent (or at least as permanent as the ice is). The shanty blocks the light, allowing anglers to see down more clearly in the water in order to spear the fish. This has given rise to the term dark-house spearing. Spearing anglers generally dangle decoys or large live baits (such as suckers) in the water to attract their target fish. They utilize spears that typically have a substantial weight to them and have seven to nine tines on the end of a seven-foot handle.

The most common species hook-and-line ice fishermen are looking for are panfish: bluegill, sunfish, perch and crappie. Tip-ups are generally used for larger game fish, such as northern pike, walleye and various trout species. In Michigan, spear fishermen are allowed to target northern pike, muskellunge, lake sturgeon and many other species. There are many restrictions associated with spear fishing and anglers should read the annual Michigan Fishing Guide for more information.

A basic tip for all three ice fishing methods is that the most success is seen around dawn until mid-morning and again from late afternoon until sundown. This is especially true for panfish and walleye. Some species can be more aggressive at other times during the day, such as northern pike. It's also important to understand that fish are more sluggish during the winter and move around less, especially during the middle of winter when ice thickness and snow cover is the heaviest. The more holes anglers cut and try, the better their chances are for locating aggressive fish.

One common piece of equipment nearly all types of anglers who ice fish utilize are electronic fish finders. These help anglers locate both aggressive and non-aggressive fish and make it easier to determine if your holes will be active and how present fish are reacting to your fishing methods.

It's important to be prepared to face the elements when you go ice fishing by including these items: shelter and apparel.

Ice fishing can be a fairly cold activity, especially on those windy days when it doesn't seem fit to be outdoors. On such days, a shanty is almost a requirement. Many portable shanties are available at your local sporting goods store, although some anglers, especially in northern Michigan where the ice fishing season can last for many months, build elaborate but removable shanties on the ice. These may have insulated walls and many of the comforts of home. Propane heaters can keep them warm and help keep the fishing holes from freezing. But even a simple windbreak, made of plywood or particle board, can help. A sheet of plywood, cut in half and hinged, makes a simple windbreak. If skis or runners are added to one side, then it can easily be pulled across the ice.

It's important to note that all shanties must be removed from the ice by a certain date, appropriate to the zone in which you are fishing. When removing a shanty, anglers must also remove any and all garbage affiliated with the structure, including plywood and propane tanks.

On less harsh days, many anglers can be seen on the ice on portable folding stools or overturned five-gallon plastic buckets. Buckets often double as gear carriers. Anglers can fit their rods, lures and baits into a bucket and easily carry them out on the ice with them. In many cases, anglers build gear boxes, often on sleds or skis, which they can pull behind them. The creativity of Michigan anglers can regularly be seen on the ice as many have built sophisticated devices to transport their gear and to ensure their comfort.

LOCAL NEWS

Remembering when...

Silver Valley, the area's winter playground, had great run

Editor's note: Below is a reprint of a story published in 2016 in the Iosco County News-Herald.

EAST TAWAS — Before today's Perchville USA in the Tawases, an annual winter sports carnival was held at Silver Valley sports park, located nine miles northwest of East Tawas on Monument Road in Huron National Forest.

The following trip down memory lane and photos are used with permission from Neil Thornton, historian and author, from his book, "In My Day, The Nifty Fifties."

A winter sports park was conceived by civic leaders in 1937. Nearly 20 businessmen met with Ralph Crowell, then supervisor of the Huron National Forest, and John "Swede" Franson, district ranger, and a large area along Silver Creek was selected to develop a family friendly winter sports facility.

Funds were scarce in late depression years and money was raised for the park's development through popular subscription services, dances and other benefit events.

Volunteers from the community joined the winter sports committee, forest service staff and Civilian Conservation Corps from Camp Silver Creek to construct the first toboggan run. They carried snow to form the trough for the 1,700-foot run. Water carried from Silver Creek, was poured from sprinkling cans to freeze an icy surface on the run.

The first toboggans were ones formerly used at Carl Schmidt's winter sport park in Greenbush. The Schmidt toboggans had not been used in years and were repaired at Silver Valley, according to Thornton.

In addition to the toboggan run, an ice rink, bordered by forest, ski runs for adults, a coasting slide and small rink for children were also built. A tin pan slide, later called Belly Flopper Hill, was one of the most popular coasting runs, Thornton stated.

Silver Valley opened to the public in January 1938.

Due to a successful first season, which attracted between 1,500 and 2,000 visitors, more funds were raised and, in the fall of 1938, timber was cut in the national forest to provide lumber to build two wooden troughs for toboggan slides, construction of a warming shed, ice rink improvements, more ski runs and to install a pump and water system to ice the toboggan slides.

Its popularity increased with each year until World War II when, from 1942-1946, park activities ceased, except for local skiing.

During that time, toboggan runs deteriorated and bridges over Silver Creek required rehabilitation. The committee raised $3,000 to reinvigorate the facility and hired returned veterans to perform the job. An estimated 30,000 visitors flocked to Silver Valley during its first post-war season.

According to a Consumers Energy brochure from the late 1950s, the park contained four slopes and trails and two tows, with a ski shop, instruction, rentals and skating. It also had a two-course, 3,100-foot toboggan slide with toboggan tow.

The beginning of Silver Valley's demise came in 1965 after two years of financial losses following carnival weekends which experienced poor weather, plus the inability for the committee to raise local funds to meet new federal regulations to improve facilities and operations. Thornton stated that the facility suffered a slow death for five years. A Jan. 27, 1966 story in the Oscoda Press told that two ski tows would be open the remainder of the season on Saturday and Sunday.

With the renewed interest of cross country skiing in the 1980s, groomed trails were extended into Silver Valley. Today, it is known as Corsair Ski Trail System where visitors can still enjoy beautiful winter scenery found in northeastern Michigan, framed by Norway, white and jack pines.
