Dear Regent Weitz,

I think it's a giant misunderstanding as well. I hope you are successful in convincing your colleagues of the same. I head Governor Ricketts attempt to explain what CRT is and it was embarrassing; I've attached his comments.

Thank you for your prompt reply. It is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

Tina Cluver

“So, the critical race theory – and I can’t think of the author right off the top of my head who wrote about this – really had a theory that, at the high level, is one that really starts creating those divisions between us about defining who we are based on race and that sort of thing and really not about how to bring us together as Americans rather than – and dividing us and also having a lot of very socialist-type ideas about how that would be implemented in our state,” Ricketts said, recommending the caller read about it.

Hi Tina:

Thank you for contacting us. There is a good deal of misinformation floating about right now. We will be addressing this in our committee and board meetings in the next three weeks.

Please know we are taking this very seriously.

To All it Does Concern:

What is this nonsense about a resolution opposing critical race theory from being taught in Nebraska universities? Are you saying this legal theory isn't already part of the curriculum? How do you expect to send students, qualified in every way, out into the world without this important information? I am concerning that you are shortchanging your students, while also hamstringing your faculty and staff.

Very disappointed in the direction you've chosen to take and I will consider this in the future at all mentions of higher education in, and from, the state of Nebraska.

Shame on you.

Sincerely,

Tina Cluver
