ROSEMOUNT, Minn. (AP) — President the Biden used a visit to a Minnesota community college Tuesday to highlight how his $1 trillion infrastructure law will create jobs and help train workforce and the spending on infrastructure, which, as we've been in close contact with the students, the importance of education as part of the infrastructure package, even though the administration says the jobs being created won't require college degrees.

Biden's $1.75 trillion social and economic package, which he is still trying to get through the Senate, includes $80 billion for community colleges to expand workforce training programs.

"Technology moves so rapidly," Delca said. "You've got to get an education to make it work.

Biden says he wants to see a mix of remote and in-office schedules will allow workers to become more productive.

Tradition of new-looking Giftstock continues on

Jim Romasaas

Giftstock was created to help provide toys for area children at Christmas. Young school age singers and other performers gathered on December and collected donations for the Salvation Army, which in turn gave out toys to local kids from qualifying families.

While the singing portion had to be canceled in 2020 and 2021 due to the coronavirus pandemic, funds are still being raised in the Giftstock tradition. The last musical event was held in 2020. "We’ve already gotten a generous amount of donations" since a campaign letter went out at the end of October/early November, said Mary Jo Balaton, who is on the Giftstock Board of Directors. Balaton said the annual shopping event to pick out the toys is slated for next week. Shortly after that, the gifts will be delivered to the Salvation Army, where they will be distributed.

Giftstock was created in 1995 by the Range-Jaycees to help provide toys for area kids at Christmas, which in turn gave out toys to local kids from qualifying families.
