KID-FRIENDLY DINING: Food, Fun and Family

Going out for dinner can be a chore for families, especially those with young children. Luckily restaurants are reaching out to them, welcoming the parents and the kids for a meal away from home.

“As more families are dining out more and spending more, restaurants need to cater to their unique dining criteria in order to satisfy their needs, which will nurture a loyal customer base,” says Sharon Sprague, co-founder of KidNosh, a restaurant review site for parents looking to dine out with kids. The site’s restaurant reviews, which are written by parent for parents, factor in kid-friendly amenities, as well as food quality and overall service.

A restaurant.com survey of 988 adults reports 59 percent of parents dine out with their children at least once a week, with 70 percent of parents saying restaurant dining is a great way to spend time with family. The survey also found 40 percent of families go out for American food, followed by 25 percent for Italian and 21 percent for Mexican.

“Not only are they spending more than couples without kids, but parents are likely to share good dining experiences with other parents on social media and word-of-mouth,” says Sprague, who thinks the kid-friendly commitment is likely permanent.

So how are restaurants wooing families? They’re serving healthy food choices like lean meats, fruits and vegetables; impressing kids with tech tools like video games and old-fashioned fun including crayons and paper, as well as books. There are also kids-eat-free days as well as kid-friendly activities like balloon artists, face painting and make-your-own pizzas or sundaes.

Another sign restaurants are family friendly? “They have family bathrooms or changing tables in both women’s and men’s room,” says Sprague.

Restaurants want repeat business from families with kids who eat at off-peak times like pre-dinner rush or on off-peak days like Monday or Tuesday. Parents seem to be pleased with the family friendly offerings too. The restaurant.com survey found 57 percent of parents like dining out as a way to teach kids table manners; 54 percent say it teaches kids about different cultures and 66 percent of parents think it’s an opportunity get kids to try new foods.
