Impending doom

Multiple threats plague season 2 of 'Salvation'

By K.A. Taylor
TV Media

Science fiction is increasingly becoming science fact. The dreams of golden era writers and directors, while perhaps a bit exaggerated, are more prevalent now than ever before. Space exploration is advancing, with multiple groups and organizations vowing to establish a new home on Mars. This might explain why so many of us are captivated by intergalactic what-ifs, and why many summer TV viewers are tuning in to the sci-fi drama "Salvation," now in its second season, with a new episode airing Monday, July 16, on CBS.

"Salvation" takes place in present-day America, using modern technology and a dash of fictional liberty to set the stage. Liam Cole (Charlie Row, "Red Band Society") is a highly intellectual MIT graduate student whose research has been devoted to mapping the unknown parts of space. What Liam didn't anticipate, however, was that his program would uncover a serious, impending threat to the entire planet: an asteroid set to collide with Earth in 186 days. Anxious to get the data to the government, Liam reaches out to his professor, but after the professor goes missing, he turns to his one other option: scientific genius Darius Tanz (Santiago Cabrera, "Big Little Lies"), a recent speaker at MIT who's still — thankfully — in town.

Armed with this new, time-sensitive information, Darius and Liam head to the Pentagon and deliver the news to the Department of Defense's deputy secretary, Harris Edwards (Ian Anthony Dale, "Hawaii Five-0"). Harris and DOD public affairs press secretary Grace Barrows (Jennifer Finnigan, "Tyrant") have no choice but to let these two skilled scientists into a covert operation called Sampson, revealing that the government was already well aware of the threat but had chosen to keep it hidden in order to prevent mass pandemonium.

The thrilling conclusion of season 1 saw the president reinstated, TESS's source code given up to RE/SYST and the group divided, awaiting the impending likely demise of the East Coast. Harris and Grace, along with the rest of the selected crew, are all stowed away within a hangar, ready to board the Ark if necessary, while Darius and Liam work from a secure location to try to determine another way to prevent Earth's destruction.

With the second season now underway, it's clear to see that the danger is compounding. RE/SYST is threatening nuclear action, the asteroid's imminent collision continues to present a dire outlook for humanity, and neither situation can be resolved without global co-operation. Meanwhile, Harris and Grace are struggling to quell potential chaos within the hangar as the newly informed citizens learn to accept their fate.

In a recent interview with KCAL9 CBS Los Angeles, Finnigan touched on the growing tension of a disaster-bent narrative. The actress notes that, while "the show is mostly about this impending asteroid — the sort of scaring, impending doom of that," people are "still living [their lives]," as the truth makes it difficult for people to accept, which leads them to set out a course of action that reveals what's truly important to them. Now that "the public knows" and "the secret is out ... people go bananas." An event such as this will no doubt "bring out the best" or to "bring out the worst [in us]," but ultimately, Finnigan believes that the most realistic depiction — something that the series strives to exhibit — is where the best and worst in us collide.

A large part of the show's success is thanks to the popular disaster genre. Most prominent in film, the genre was born in 1901 with a silent film called "Fire!," though "Salvation" is likely drawing more so from the golden era of disaster cinema, circa the 1970s. Films such as "Airport" (1970), "Earthquake" (1974) and "Meteor" (1979) gave audiences a thirst for the point at which science fiction and dramatic thrillers meet. In the late 1990s, a new wave of disaster films arrived that, like "Salvation," saw our biggest threat coming from the stars. "Independence Day" (1996), "Deep Impact" (1998) and "Armageddon" (1998) are just three of the space-based dramatic thrillers that signified this once niche subcategory of the genre growing increasingly prominent.

Not restricted by the two-to-three-hour runtime of its big-screen forerunners, "Salvation" provides deeper insight into the human reactions and cost of catastrophic events, rather than placing emphasis on fantastic explosions, tidal waves and meteor collisions. Despite the imminence of the threat, audiences find themselves more compelled by the characters' narratives than a desire to witness destruction, which is a refreshing take on a genre increasingly oversaturated with CGI and mass destruction.

As season 2 of "Salvation" progresses, the price of loyalty will increase in value. As the asteroid continues its journey toward Earth, Harris, Grace, Liam and Darius will do all they can to try and maintain a sense of calm while uncovering a means by which disaster might ultimately be prevented. If all else fails, there is, of course, the Ark, but that will mean bidding a tearful adieu to two beloved characters. Find out the fates of our daring heroes and the planet itself, as "Salvation" continues with a new episode airing Monday, July 16, on CBS.

Rampage

George, an albino gorilla living in a wildlife preserve near San Diego, is exposed to a mutagenic pathogen that causes him to both grow larger at an alarming rate and become more aggressive. His handler, Davis (Johnson), learns that the pathogen was developed as a biological weapon, but after government agents take the massive gorilla into captivity, George escapes and heads to Chicago, where the company that developed the pathogen is emitting a signal to attract the animal. When two other beasts that have also been exposed, a wolf and a crocodile, also arrive in the city, a massive battle breaks out between the three titanic animals and the military forces trying to save the city.

I Feel Pretty

Renee (Schumer) struggles with insecurity over her appearance, but that changes one day after she falls off her bike and hits her head. When she regains consciousness, she suddenly sees herself as thin and beautiful, and her whole attitude to life changes because of it. When a cute guy (Scovel) makes small talk at the dry cleaner's, she assumes he's hitting on her and insists on exchanging numbers. She applies for a receptionist position at the cosmetics company where she works that she'd previously assumed she was too homely to get, and her positive attitude impresses her boss and lands her the position. It doesn't take long for her newfound confidence to twist into arrogance, though, and she begins to alienate her friends and endanger her job.

Coastal chow down

America's seashores sizzle in new Cooking Channel series

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

The seaside is beautiful at any time of the year, but to most of us, the salty breezes and sandy shores are at their best right now, in the heat of summer. Not all of us live within easy reach of the seaside, but that just makes every visit all the more special.

Of course, a big part of the ocean's appeal is the food, and lobster roll king Sabin Lomac is going coast to coast in his new Cooking Channel show to check out some of the best seaside eats he can find.

"Seaside Snacks & Shacks" premieres Thursday, July 19, with Lomac paying a visit to Lu-lu's, a classy coastal dive that's run by none other than musician Jimmy Buffett's sister, where Lomac chows down on a fried green tomato pimento cheese-burger that's served up with some classic Southern gumbo. Then, on South Carolina's Daufuskie Island, he digs into delicious deviled blue crab and some incredible fried chicken.

It isn't just the East Coast that's on Lomac's itinerary in the premiere. Still hungry, he heads west to San Diego's shore, where a hotdog stand serves up a chili con carne dog that packs in three different meats, and a blazing-hot bomb-ero dog that's topped with seven super-spicy salsas. For his last stop, he sticks to California and heads to Balboa Island for dessert. While admiring the gorgeous views, he checks out a local favorite: frozen bananas. Not content to enjoy just one, he first tries the original with chocolate and rainbow sprinkles, and follows it up by coming up with his own specialty flavor of the frozen fruit treat.

Through all six episodes, Lomac not only hits coastal destinations in the west and the east, but also the north and south. The shores of Lake Michigan and the Gulf Coast have beaches that are just as spectacular as those in New England or the Carolinas, and the foods served there are just as delightful to boot.

Good food, great views and seaside waves just go together, especially at this time of year. "Seaside Snacks & Shacks" premieres Thursday, July 19, on Cooking Channel.

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: I'm a great fan of "If Loving You Is Wrong." Can you please tell me when it will be returning this year? I can't wait to see it.
A: I'm afraid I can't — OWN is taking its time dishing out renewals for its shows. I can, however, double-speculate.

First I have to speculate about whether it will be renewed for another round, which seems fairly likely at this point. OWN (otherwise known as the Oprah Winfrey Network) clearly enjoys being in the Tyler Perry business: "If Loving You Is Wrong" is one of the multiple hit shows and films that have come out of writer/director/producer/actor Perry's brain in recent years.
Though "If Loving You Is Wrong" took a bit of a dip in the ratings this season — it shed about 300,000 viewers over the course of season 3, and season 3 was already drawing fewer than season 2 — its numbers are still strong for a cable show. Indeed, the only OWN show that's doing better is "The Haves and the Have Nots," which also happens to be a Tyler Perry show.

In other encouraging news, none of the stars have suddenly fled to other shows since the third season ended in March. All this makes it fairly likely that the show will be picked up for a fourth season.
As for when, that's an even easier guess: every other season so far has debuted in September, so the next one, if it happens, will likely do the same.

Q: I hear "Code Black" has been canceled. Please tell me it's not true, or at least tell me that the powers that saw fit to cancel this great show were considerate enough to have given it an ending, and not just leave us hanging.
A: The way you've phrased your question means I can phrase my answer like it's good news: yes, you will get a satisfying ending to your show, which is in fact canceled.
CBS made the decision to cancel "Code Black" in late May, shortly after the show's third season began.
However, much like you, the show's writers met the cancellation with a sort of grim fatalism. Series creator Michael Seitzman said on Twitter that they sensed the end was coming and they acted accordingly.

"We always suspected this would be the last season. We wrote it to end that way."
That is to say, the current season will end in a satisfying, loose end-type sort of way.
TVSeriesFinale.com, which makes a business of tracking the fate of TV shows, got pretty cute about its explanation for the cancellation: "The patient eventually succumbed to acute ratings anemia."

That's cute because it was a medical show, and because the show's ratings have been dropping since it started.
By the point at which CBS canceled it, it was averaging about 5.5 million viewers, which was a big drop from the seven million it averaged in its first season. And its numbers in the 18-49 demographic, which are arguably even more important in these decisions, were even worse, dropping about 25 percent from season to season since it began.
