PBS looks into a little-known period in Churchill's life

By Jacqueline Spendlove
TV Media

Imagine it was easier being a public figure in the '50s than it is today. Thanks to the Internet, social media and instant photography, the words and actions of today's politicians and celebrities are spread far and wide almost immediately.

Needless to say, this was not always the case. Back in Winston Churchill's day, when that most venerable of men was serving as prime minister of the United Kingdom for the second time, he suffered a debilitating stroke — and, amazingly, no one knew about it outside his inner circle. A special "Masterpiece" drama examines this time in Churchill's life, in the summer of 1953, while the PM relearned how to speak and walk, totally unbeknownst to the majority of the world, or even the government. "Churchill's Secret" airs Sunday, Sept. 11, on PBS.

Widely regarded as one of British history's most influential figures, Churchill has been portrayed numerous times on screen, generally with his iconic cigar-mouthed, homburg-topped look. "Churchill's Secret" takes a look into a little-known period in the British Bulldog's life, as the 78-year-old man makes a gradual and difficult recovery from a series of strokes that very well could have killed him.

He's played by master of the screen and stage Michael Gambon ("Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2," 2011), whose acting career has spanned more than half a century and has earned him countless accolades. Seldom far from the PM's side are his wife, Clementine (Lindsay Duncan, "The Honourable Woman"), private secretary and close friend Jock Colville (Patrick Kennedy, "Atonement," 2007) and nurse Millie Appleby (Romola Garai, "Amazing Grace," 2006).

The film is set in the summer of 1953, a little less than two years into Churchill's second run as prime minister. After suffering a stroke during a 10 Downing Street dinner, the PM loses consciousness and his speech is severely impaired. Determined from the start to keep it from the public, he goes ahead with a Cabinet meeting the next morning, before being spirited away to Chartwell, his country seat in Kent.

"He stayed at his house for months ... nobody saw him," Gambon told the Independent. "It's a bit odd. We wouldn't tolerate that now. If the prime minister had a stroke, we'd know about it two minutes later."

To be sure, the level of discretion exercised by everyone close to the PM is impressive, with even Fleet Street being silenced, thanks to the loyalty of three of the most powerful press barons. Most of the characters in the film are based on real people in Churchill's life, though Nurse Millie is fictional, invented by author Jonathan Smith for his book on which the drama is based.

"When I came to write the book, I tried to see the story from the points of view of the powerful central players," the author explained to the Mirror. "I also wanted to see it as one of the PM's nurses might have done. So I took a liberty. I made up Nurse Appleby, the only fictional character in 'Churchill's Secret.' She was with Churchill every faltering step of the way, with every breath he took, and she helped unlock the story for me."

Indeed, the respect and fondness that grow between the felled PM and his no-nonsense nurse are a nice infusion into a largely sad story. Transported to Chartwell without even being told for whom she would be working, Millie takes no guff, either from her often grumbly patient himself or from his boorish, wholly unpleasant son Randolph (Matthew Macfadyen, "Death at a Funeral," 2007). She sits beside him as his booze-swilling children bicker in the next room, is called in to join the family during movie night, and is an ever-present source of patience and fortitude as Churchill slowly recovers.

But why keep it from the public at all? The man who had guided his country through the darkest days of World War II didn't want the people of England to know that their leader was — for the time being, in any event — incapable of leading. Had Churchill's stroke become public knowledge, he could have been forced to resign. To make matters more problematic, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden (Alex Jennings, "The Queen," 2006) — the man expected to step in as Churchill's successor — was himself in hospital recovering from surgery. With no one currently available to run the country, there ran the risk of a general election being called, and a scramble for leadership that could destabilize the government.

So it fell to those closest to Churchill to quietly keep things running, while the majority of the nation remained blissfully unaware that their PM was bedridden, relearning to speak and struggling to remember the most pivotal moments and actions from the war.

They undoubtedly pulled it off, since the events of "Churchill's Secret" have heretofore remained unknown to many. The film has already aired on ITV in the U.K., and the response has been mostly positive. The acting of many of the cast members has been praised, in particular, with more than one critic noting that Gambon's wonderful performance allows one to forget that he really doesn't look a whole lot like Churchill.

Tune in to "Masterpiece" to see "Churchill's Secret" when it makes its way across the pond Sunday, Sept. 11, on PBS.

The Conjuring 2

When bizarre things keep happening in their London home, the Hodgson family becomes convinced that some sort of malevolent spirit is haunting the building. Word of their troubles eventually reaches the ears of famous paranormal investigators Ed (Wilson) and Lorraine Warren (Farmiga), who travel to England to lend whatever help they can provide to the family. Although she is initially somewhat skeptical of the Hodgsons' claims, Lorraine is wary of this investigation after she has a vision of Ed's death while the two of them are attempting to communicate with spirits. When the pair finally makes it to the Hodgsons' London home, they find a hostile presence that may be more dangerous than either of them can handle. Director: James Wan. Stars: Patrick Wilson, Vera Farmiga, Madison Wolfe, Frances O'Connor, Lauren Esposito, Simon McBurney. 2016. 134 min. Horror.

Popstar: Never Stop Never Stopping

Conner4Real (Samberg) is one of the world's biggest popstars, with millions of screaming fans, countless albums and singles

sold, dozens of hangers-on and the tabloids ravenously following his every move and devouring every slipup that he makes. When his second solo album, "Conquest," flops, Conner sees his shining star fading and becomes determined to do anything to keep himself in the spotlight — anything, that is, except reunite with the old band that first brought him fame, despite his old bandmates once having also been his closest friends.

Directors: Akiva Schaffer, Jorma Taccone. Stars: Andy Samberg, Jorma Taccone, Akiva Schaffer, Sarah Silverman, Tim Meadows. 2016. 87 min. Comedy.

Marauders

As branch after branch of his Cincinnati banking empire keeps getting robbed by well-organized, masked criminals, banking executive Hubert (Willis) becomes increasingly unhinged. FBI agent Montgomery (Meloni) is assigned to lead the team trying to get to the bottom of the heists, and as the number of robberies continues to mount, he begins to suspect that it might be an inside job by Hubert on behalf of his powerful clients.

Director: Steven C. Miller. Stars: Bruce Willis, Christopher Meloni, Dave Bautista, Adrian Grenier, Lydia Hull. 2016. 107 min. Crime.

'Worst Cooks in America' is getting a lot more famous

By Andrew Warren

TV Media

The celebrities on screen are sizzling this fall, and not just the ones starring in the season's hottest new cable dramas. Anne Burrell's back for a ninth season of Food Network's "Worst Cooks in America," and she'll be joined by a familiar face: Rachael Ray is returning for a second season as Anne's co-mentor.

The last time Ray squared off against Burrell was back in season 7, when the pair of culinary pros went face to face to train up two groups of celebrities who were total dunces in the kitchen.

Well, it's time for Round 2. The second season of "Worst Cooks in America: Celebrity Edition" premieres Wednesday, Sept. 14, on Food Network, with a new batch of celebrities hoping to hone their culinary skills and work out their palates. With $50,000 up for grabs for the eventual winner (to be given to a charity of his or her choice, of course), these culinary dunces will be applying some of the devotion and drive that's brought them fame and fortune to learning about knife work and emulsions.

And that's what "Worst Cooks" is ultimately about: taking the worst of the worst and turning them into, if not quite the best, at least passable home cooks.

So which celebrities have been rustled up for this round of competition? "The Facts of Life" star Mindy Cohn, comedian Tommy Davidson, "Kyle XY" star Matt Dallas, and star of the 1960s sitcom "I Dream of Jeannie" Barbara Eden are among the famous folks who will be divided into two teams, with each taking on either Burrell or Ray as a mentor in the ways of the cook.

Comedian and longtime "Wipeout" co-host John Henson, "The Real" co-host Loni Love, "The Real Housewives of Atlanta" star Kenya Moore, actress and star of "The King of Queens" Nicole Sullivan, and "Jersey Shore" star Mike "The Situation" Sorrentino round out the cast of celebrities.

These nine celebrities may be some of the worst cooks that Burrell and Ray could come up with, but they're making it their personal mission to whip them into shape — or at least get them to show some slight improvement. The second season of "Worst Cooks in America: Celebrity Edition" premieres Wednesday, Sept. 14, on Food Network.

By Adam Thomlison
TV Media

Q: In the series "NCIS: New Orleans," coroner Dr. Loretta Wade wears colorful hats in the lab. Where can I purchase them?

A: Though CBS's online store (at CBSStore.com) has a surprisingly large line of "NCIS"-themed merchandise, including caps, you won't find any of Dr. Wade's colorful scrub hats there.

The hats CCH Pounder ("The Shield") wears as Dr. Wade in "NCIS: New Orleans" are custom made by the CBS wardrobe department — custom for her, no less.

"When I first started the show, I knew I wanted to find something unique for her character, considering she spends most of her screen time in scrubs," the show's lead costume designer, Ann Walters, told the New Orleans Times-Picayune newspaper. "And it was also practical. I wanted something that worked with her hair."

Still, CBS is making the most of the style choice — it even posted a photo gallery on the show's official site dedicated to her headgear. Who knows, it may just be a matter of time before the network starts selling them.

If her hats seem a little light-hearted given the work she does, that might have something to do with Pounder's own view of the work of a coroner, which she developed by job-shadowing a member of the Los Angeles County coroner's department.

"All the people that I met in the coroner's office had a kind of joy and kind of happiness that I found extraordinary, and I wanted to make sure that's part of it, in the sense that they recognize what life is," she said during a panel at CBS's summer press tour in 2014. "I appreciated that."

Q: What happened to the show "Hollywood Hillbillies"?

A: "Hollywood Hillbillies," the reality show following a Georgia-born Internet star who moves his family to Hollywood, appears to have been canceled. I say "appears" because it was the sort of show that sort of slips through the cracks, and can disappear without a word — without an official one, anyway.

All we know for certain is that there haven't been new episodes of the show in well over a year.

If it were to come back for another season (which, to be clear, almost certainly won't happen at this point), it would need a substantial overhaul, starting with the credits: Its star is no longer named Michael Kittrell, she's now named Claire.

Kittrell made the announcement on YouTube, the platform that first brought her stardom thanks to the video "Gingers Do Have Souls," which she posted (as Michael) back in 2010, and which subsequently went viral, racking up millions of views. Interestingly, in her coming-out video, she credits Caitlyn Jenner (formerly Bruce Jenner), member of the prominent reality TV family the Kardashians, with inspiring her to stop "pretending to be someone else."

The final episode of "Hollywood Hillbillies" aired in July of last summer. In fact, the series ended with a bit of a bang, airing back-to-back new episodes on the same day. This was surely a rush for fans, who had gotten used to the show occasionally going for weeks without a new episode.
