Third 'First'

It seems as if Terry (Taye Diggs, "Private Practice") may be right about his conspiracy theory when a suspect in the Normandy Parker case is murdered in a new episode of "Murder in the First," airing Sunday, July 24, on TNT. Helmed by acclaimed TV producer and writer Steven Bochco, each season of the series follows the investigation into a violent crime in the city of San Francisco.

'Murder in the First' shakes up police dramas

By Kyla Brewer
TV Media

As the summer swelters on, game shows and reality TV programs rule prime time. But for those who prefer more traditional TV fare, TNT serves up a police procedural with a fresh cast and plenty of drama.

Taye Diggs ("Private Practice") and Kathleen Robertson ("Boss") star as Terry English and Hildy Mulligan, homicide inspectors investigating the murder of all-star quarterback Normandy Parker in a new episode of "Murder in the First," airing Sunday, July 24, on TNT. Set in San Francisco, the show was created by 10-time Emmy winner Steven Bochco ("NYPD Blue") and Eric Lodal ("Laredo"), the latter of whom left the show midway through the second season for undisclosed reasons.

As in previous seasons, season 3 follows a single, complicated investigation instead of wrapping up a new mystery each week like many other prime-time dramas. When "Murder in the First" debuted in 2014, Bochco explained his preference for examining a single case throughout the season to the L.A. Times.

"What's fun about the single storyline is you get to develop characters, to really make them well examined," said the producer.

Three seasons in, English and Mulligan are much more than stereotypical prime-time cops. Their personal lives are every bit as fascinating as the cases they tackle, from his grief over the death of his terminally ill wife to her struggles as a single mom. This season is expected to be particularly heartbreaking as Mulligan faces a potentially life-threatening illness. The stress over what might happen to her daughter overwhelms her, even as the Parker case looms.

Season 3 had originally been slated to begin June 19, but due to the tragic Orlando Pulse nightclub shooting, the debut was pushed to June 26, out of respect for the victims and their loved ones. The same thing happened with TNT's "The Last Ship." With a little more than 1.3 million viewers, numbers were down for this year's season premiere, but it's important to note that the June 26 opener aired opposite the finale of the HBO juggernaut "Game of Thrones," so there was bound to be a dip.

"Murder in the First" has shown tremendous potential since its debut in 2014, when it ranked among cable's top 10 prime-time dramas. Season 1 pulled in more than five million viewers per episode over multiple platforms, including about 3.76 million live viewers. The 12-episode second season clocked in with more than two million average live viewers, and in December 2015, TNT announced "Murder in the First" had been renewed for a 10-episode third season, along with fellow hit dramas "Major Crimes" and "The Librarians."

Although English and Mulligan are undoubtedly the focus of the series, Diggs and Robertson are supported by a strong cast. Currie Graham ("Raising the Bar") stars as chief prosecutor Mario Siletti, who's struggling in the wake of a tragic car accident this season. "Once Upon a Time's" Raphael Sbarge works alongside the two leads as philosophical homicide detective David Molk, who's been partnered up with Edgar Navarro, played by Lombardo Boyar ("The Bernie Mac Show"). Their SFPD squad is supervised by Ian Anthony Dale ("Hawaii Five-0") as Lieut. Jim Koto. The returning cast also includes Mimi Kirkland ("Safe Haven," 2013) as Hildy's young daughter, Louise.

Back in March, news broke that Michael Gaston ("The Leftovers") had joined the third season cast of "Murder in the First." He portrays defense attorney Alfred Arkin, billed as a "warm family man." The role marks a reunion for Gaston and Bochco, who previously worked together in Bochco's "Blind Justice" for ABC. He isn't the only "Murder in the First" rookie, either. The cast also welcomes Corey Reynolds ("The Closer") as assistant district attorney Martin Reardon. Sara Paxton ("Darcy's Wild Life") stars as Alicia Barnes, a troubled 22-year-old pop star who'd caught Parker's eye before his untimely death. Eighties movie icon Anthony Michael Hall ("The Dead Zone") has been tapped to play Barnes's father, Paul.

The cast is top notch, and it also helps that Bochco is no stranger to police dramas, with such legendary TV series as "NYPD Blue" and "Hill Street Blues" under his belt. He was also behind hits such as "L.A. Law" and "Doogie Howser, M.D." In fact, the producer and writer is such a luminary in the television industry that some credit him with changing the face of prime-time television dramas by pioneering the large ensemble cast and continuous story arcs.

His legacy continues in "Murder in the First," which returns with a new episode Sunday, July 24, on TNT. In the episode, a suspect in the Parker case is murdered, giving some weight to English's conspiracy theory. Meanwhile, Siletti's legal troubles become even more complicated because of a ruinous civil suit, which threatens to fracture the fragile peace he's made with his family. Also, Mulligan attempts to move on by going on a date. TNT will make the episode available on demand the day after broadcast for anyone who might miss it, and other season 3 episodes will also be available if fans want to rewatch or play catchup.

Culinary classics

Cooking Channel checks out the big hits from the kitchen

By Andrew Warren
TV Media

What's your favorite comfort food? Come on, we all have one. For me, it's the grilled cheese sandwich. It's oh so simple to make, but there's nothing that takes me back to my childhood quicker than gooey, melty cheese between two crispy slices of bread. I guess you could call the grilled cheese my greatest food hit.

And that is what "Food's Greatest Hits" is all about. The new Cooking Channel show premiered July 11, and is currently airing Monday evenings on the culinary channel.

Each episode takes an in-depth look at the favorite foods people crave and dream about, from my cheesy grilled favorite to milkshakes to burgers. Culinary experts are standing by to take hungry viewers on a journey to explore the history behind these dishes, and then will even try out some new and crazy twists on the old favorites.

The experts on hand also serve as hosts for each episode, and they're a bit of a Cooking Channel all-star team. They all have their own personal greatest hit, and they're relishing the chance to take a deeper look at some of their favorite foods.

Georgia Hardstark and Alie Ward are a bubbly pair who co-hosted Cooking Channel's digital series "Classy Ladies" and frequently pop up in "Unique Sweets." Their food greatest hit? The thick, rich and classic, all-American milkshake.

Rev Run, a music icon who's sold tens of millions of records, and his wife, Justine Simmons, have found a whole new generation of fans with their Cooking Channel show "Rev Run's Sunday Suppers" in which they share their personal family recipes with viewers.

Taste testers Nicole and Asher in "Food's Greatest Hits"

Canadian favorite Roger Mooking is taking a turn as host. He's previously hosted "Man Fire Food" and "Everyday Exotic," and is well known for his love of hot, spicy foods.

Other experts who have been hosting throughout the season include "The Real Girl's Kitchen's" Haylie Duff, "Carnival Eats'" Noah

Cappe, "Eden Eats'" Eden Grinshpan, "Sugar Showdown's" Josh Elkin, "Taste in Translation's" Aarti Sequeira, and Cory Vitiello, star of Food Network Canada's "Chef in Your Ear."

The tastiest classics are on full display in Cooking Channel's "Food's Greatest Hits," currently airing Monday evenings.

TV Media

Q: Can you tell me if BBC's "The Musketeers" has been canceled? It was such an awesome show and it hasn't been on now for over a year!

A: I have bad news for you, and then good news, which turns into more bad news. "The Musketeers" has been canceled, as you suspect. But, there is a third season which, it seems, you haven't seen yet. However, you won't see it on TV.

"The Musketeers" was a British show that aired all over the world. Canadian viewers got to watch the whole series on Showcase and BBC Canada, but American viewers only got the first two seasons on BBC America. After that, it was dropped from TV entirely and moved to the online streaming site Hulu.com. The whole third season is now available there.

But that season was indeed the last. Executive producer Jessica Pope is happy with this, saying it allows the show to finish strong.

"We did want to go out on a high," she said in an interview with the British TV site CultBox. "We wanted to just prove to ourselves we'd done all the biggest stories we could do without then sort of filtering out into something that just repeated itself, really."

Q: Has anyone tried to boot "Indiana Jones" into a TV series?

A: I can't speak to the number of times people have had the idea, or even went so far as to meet with George Lucas and have him say

"no." But in terms of the number of times anything (even just a pilot) was produced, there was just one: "The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles."

Despite being nominated for a fistful of Emmys (albeit mostly technical ones), the series only lasted for two seasons, airing from 1992 to 1993, though it was revived for a couple of TV movies in subsequent years.

Supposedly it wasn't canceled for a lack of ratings, but rather because it was just very expensive to produce — it tried its best to recreate the grand scale of the films, which were not exactly cheap themselves.

It didn't help the budget to have four different actors in the iconic title role at the same time. Mostly it was Sean Patrick Flanery (otherwise best known as one of the MacManus brothers in the Boondock Saints films) playing Indiana in his teenage years, hence the "Young" moniker. However, a couple of episodes featured an even younger version, played by Corey Carrier.

The episodes also featured introductions and conclusions ("bookends" in industry lingo) by an elderly Dr. Jones, played by stage actor George Hall ("Remember WENN"). And one very special episode featured a cameo by the man himself, Harrison Ford ("Star Wars," 1977), briefly reprising the role he made famous.

Though this was in fact the only Indiana Jones TV series, you may see it under another name, "The Adventures of Young Indiana Jones." The producers recut the series under the new title, turning the one-hour episodes into a series of two-hour movies, for the home video release and for later broadcasts.
