Playing it Smart is Key to Shoveling the Snow

It's that time of the year when winter can really show its teeth. For adults, snow — especially the heavy stuff — also means lots of shoveling, which can lead to an assortment of health-related problems if you're not careful and properly prepared for the winter season.

"Every year, thousands of people end up in an emergency department due to things happening when they're shoveling snow," says Amy Henderson, a family practice physician assistant for OSF HealthCare. "These include falls, sometimes people experience heart attacks from strenuous activities, back injuries amongst other things. So, it's really important to take some caution when you are going to be shoveling snow, and the snow is coming."

ple who have suffered a heart attack or other serious illness. Henderson says to check with your doctor first if you have any concerns about your health.

"If a person develops any chest pain, sharp, radiating arm pain, jaw pain, those are all signs and symptoms of a possible heart attack," says Henderson. "If those symptoms do not improve with rest after a short amount of time, it's concerning. My advice would be to seek immediate medical attention if you're concerned at all about a cardiac event or a heart attack. In this case it's always good to play it safe than sorry."

Safety is key when it comes to snow and ice. Henderson offers a few basic tips before getting started with shoveling your sidewalk or driveway.

"One of the most important things to do is wear the appropriate clothing
