Brandon Moreno wore a wide smile as he walked into the Santa Cruz Center on Thursday, the first day of classes at the community college campus in Nogales.

A recent graduate of Rio Rico High School, Moreno said he worked at a produce warehouse over the summer and is planning to study supply chain management. One day, he said, he hopes to open his own produce business.

Moreno is one of hundreds of students starting Pima Community College classes at the Santa Cruz Center this semester. Through Aug. 22, the center had recorded 759 class registrations for students taking PCC courses in Nogales, according to information provided by the center.
