NATIONAL

FARM

SAFETY AND
HEALTH WEEK
SEPTEMBER 18-24, 2022

Improving farm safety

Did you know that agriculture ranks as one of the most dangerous industries in America?

Each year, hundreds of deaths and thousands of injuries occur on the country's farms. However, the vast majority of these incidents could be avoided through better awareness of the hazards and safety practices specific to agricultural occupations. This is why the National Education Center for Agricultural Safety is committed to hosting National Farm Safety and Health Week. This year, the event will take place from September 17 to 23 under the theme Putting Farm Safety into Practice.

HAZARD SAFETY

The first step to creating safer agricultural work environments is to accurately identify all potential hazards. Hazards can be obvious, hidden or developing. Some of the most common ones involve:

- Confined spaces, particularly silos, manure pits and water tanks, where suffocation and poisoning are possible.
- Chemicals. This includes pesticides, herbicides and other toxins.
- Electricity. Switches, cords and machinery may prove to be faulty.
- Vehicles. Use of ATVs, tractors, forklifts and other vehicles can lead to falls or crashes.
- Machinery with unguarded parts such as chainsaws, augers, fans, conveyors and others.

Once specific hazards are recognized, ways to minimize the risks involved should be designed. The resulting farm safety plan might include strategies such as utilizing personal protective equipment, implementing administrative or engineering controls, altering work practices, or eliminating the hazard altogether. Farmers are responsible for keeping their farms safe by reviewing protocols and providing thorough training for new workers. As farm environments evolve over time, it's important to regularly adapt the safety measures in place.
