The enormous gap in wealth between Black and white people is one of the most outrageous and stubborn inequities of American life. For every dollar a typical white household has, a Black one has 12 cents, a divide that has grown over the last half-century. This collection of essays addresses how to repair the gap.

Michael L. Lomax

We must invest more resources in the education of low-income, first-generation Black college-goers and into HBCUs.

Molefi Kete Asante

The principal issue is the racial ladder created by white people who seek to claim superiority for whites. This is a lie that must be attacked in all quarters.

Michael Rashid

One path with a very high return on investment, for you and for your children, is to marry and build a strong family.

William Darity Jr.

The wealth gap is too enormous to be remedied through incremental programs. What’s needed are federal reparations.

Stephanie Creary & Nancy Rothbard

Black and Hispanic workers have long endured higher unemployment than whites. If businesses want to close the gap and reap the rewards that come with having diverse teams, they need to do sustained, challenging work to build inclusive workplaces.
