States expand child sex abuse laws

Since 2018, 15 states and the District of Columbia have extended or suspended statute of limitations to allow child sex abuse claims stretching back decades. Eight states created lookback windows allowing people to sue no matter how long ago the alleged abuse took place.

