Corvallis High School senior spotlight: Abigail Buoy

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA
michelle.mcconna
@ravallirepublic.com

Corvallis High School has chosen to highlight Abigail Buoy.

Principal Cammie Knapp said Buoy is active in her education and development.

"She has worked as one of our representatives on the Bitterroot Health Junior Board of Directors, participated in our American Legion contest and received funds for her essay, and participated in community service this year with our school calendar," Knapp said.

Buoy has attended Corvallis schools since kindergarten, for 13 years, mostly with the same classmates.

"It's really funny because sometimes people move and come back years later and it is fun to re-connect," Buoy said. "Not everyone stays but a lot of them do, so I'm really close to a lot of kids in my grade. I love the people here. I'm close with the teachers and they do a lot to help us out. Here everyone looks out for each other and wants to help each other."

Abigail Buoy has attended Corvallis schools for 13 years and plans on going into a nursing career.

Buoy played soccer for all four years of high school, is in Interact and is president of the National Honor Society. She said she enjoys Interact and NHS because they are community outreach and service organizations.

"In high school everyone is busy, but it is nice to have a time reserved to help people," Buoy said. "It's nice to be involved with others and help them. It is a scheduled time, once a month, that is not time for you but for someone else."

Her favorite subjects are English and science. She plans on going to Montana State University to further her education.

"I'm going into nursing and my plan is to become a certified registered nurse anesthetist," Buoy said. "I want to go into nursing because I like helping people, but the anesthesia part is more of being in the surgery part rather than helping people get out of bed. I just think that would be super-interesting."

Buoy takes the CHS online healthcare occupations class offered as part of the pathway program. It is an overview of healthcare occupations and details all that goes into working with patients.

"It has been super-cool and showed all the different pathways you can do," Buoy said. "It has helped me narrow down my career. They also show you all the parts and pieces that make the hospital work. We go to the hospital once a month and do in-person work. We are starting our CNA [Certified Nursing Assistant] training right now, which will be helpful for the future."

She said she chose MSU because she likes Bozeman, MSU received a boost in funding and the nursing program accepts everyone with a B average.

"It is super-cool because the other schools said they had a 19% acceptance rate, but this will get me into nursing program guaranteed, right away," Buoy said. "I have to go to school after college to get my anesthetist degree, so it just made sense to go there."

Darby High School senior spotlight:

Sierra Reed

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA

michelle.mcconnaha@ravallirepublic.com

Darby High School has chosen to highlight graduating senior Sierra Reed.

Reed has attended school in Darby since preschool, experiencing ups and downs along the way. Through her own grit, determination and personal resilience, she is now second in her class.

Reed said she loves Darby school.

"It's a tight community, it is small, and the teachers stay the same for the most part," Reed said. "I TA [Teacher Assistant] in the elementary school and the teachers remember me. It is like a family. The teachers know everybody, and you get a lot of one-on-one help. It's nice."

Her favorite subjects are English and science. She has joined almost every club at DHS and competed in volleyball, basketball and track.

Last year she started participating in the DHS SkillsUSA team.

"It is a job skills program that you get to compete in, which is really fun," Reed said. "I won and now I get to go to nationals in Atlanta at the end of June. I did Chapter Display and Pin Design. At nationals everyone swaps pins and it is competitive."

Her design is in the shape of a belt buckle to represent Montana. It has a mining pick and shovel, trees, mountains and teepees.

"The teepees represent the Native American culture," Reed said. "They symbolize camp which means permanent and that it is home for everybody. I'm Native American on my mom's side."

DHS Counselor Kurt Kohn said Reed is "a pretty special young lady."

"She has done wonderful things and has had some challenges but is a real success story for us," Kohn said.

Reed moved to Darby around age 3 after her parents separated and she lived with her dad and grandmother.

"My dad didn't know how to do my hair, but I'd bring a brush and hair ties to preschool," Reed said. "The teachers taught me how to dress, got me lip gloss and jewelry. It made me feel like I had a ton of moms everywhere I went. My dad worked a lot, so my friends' parents would cheer me on at games and assemblies. Growing up, I had people to support me here."

Her family divided even more, and she and her brother were the only ones together.

"I started getting depressed in sixth grade," Reed said. "I stopped going to

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA, RAVALLI REPUBLIC

Sierra Reed plans to attend Vermont State Johnson on an academic scholarship to study psychology and early childhood development. She will also compete in college volleyball and track.

school for a while and was just crying"

For several years she was behind in her classes and said eighth grade was the hardest.

"I would come to school but was a wreck," Reed said. "I was angry."

After a series of setbacks, she received counseling that helped her see the positive side of personal effort.

"I wanted to get better grades, strive and learn," Reed said. "I started being happier. I would stand up straight and have my hair done every morning. I realized I missed track and realized I didn't want to do that again."

She said she still struggles every day but has learned coping skills.

"When I realize depression is starting, I spend less time in my room and more time with my family," she said. "I understand my cycle and can cope with it. Life is easier, I know what to do. Now that I've been through it, I want to work with kids and help them."

Kohn said Reed has had a "tremendous journey."

"Sierra has matured, and other students gravitate to her for a listening ear," Kohn said. "Sierra has a reputation in our school of kindness, compassion toward others and helping others. It has become truly special for our school to watch Sierra's journey and see where she came from and where she is now. She gives hope to others, has goals, is loving life and having extreme success."

Kohn said Reed takes rigorous classes and is a recipient of the Greater Ravalli Scholarship.

After graduation Reed plans to attend college and study psychology and early childhood development.

"I want to work with adolescents and help them," she said. "I am going to Vermont State Johnson to study and will compete in volleyball and track. All the offers I got for volleyball were on the east coast and Vermont was the prettiest one I saw. Everyone talks to each other and knows each other. And 75% of all the students do sports so everyone intermingles with each other, which is nice. It's like Darby."

Florence-Carlton High School senior Hailey Sutton is a state champion wrestler.

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA, RAVALLI REPUBLIC

Florence-Carlton High School Senior Hailey Sutton is a state champion wrestler with a goal of becoming a large animal veterinarian.

Florence-Carlton senior spotlight: Hailey Sutton

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA

michelle.mcconnaha@ravallirepublic.com

Florence-Carlton High School has chosen to highlight graduating senior Hailey Sutton.

Principal Scott March said Sutton always works hard and always has a smile on her face.

"We really love your passion," March said. "You're always bringing in your brother and always have a positive attitude."

He said Sutton is involved in a lot of activities — she is a state champion wrestler, participates in FFA and 4-H and plays right field on the softball team.

Sutton said she moved to Florence and started attending school there her sixth-grade year. Her favorite subject is English.

"I like writing and reading, and my English teachers have been really great," she said.

Sutton said the best part of attending FCHS is the small size.

"I feel like it is more community-based, especially the sports programs that have a family atmosphere," she said. "Everybody knows everybody, and we are all supportive of each other. Our senior class is definitely a tight-knit group, and we get along with each other really well. I've been with the same kids since sixth grade and most of them have been together since kindergarten — for 13 years."

For her career Sutton said she plans to go into veterinary science for large animals. She currently has goats, sheep, horses, dogs and cats.

"I just love animals," Sutton said. "In 4-H I show sheep, goats and horses all through the summer. I'm passionate about taking care of animals and being around them and a veterinary science career will allow me to do that."

She is undecided about where she will complete her studies.

"I'm still getting offers for wrestling, I want to get the right fit for me," Sutton said. "Wrestling is so rewarding. You get out what you put in. At the end of the day, you're the only one to blame if something goes bad or if something goes good. It just depends on how hard you work and how bad you want it."

Sutton said her dad is the wrestling coach and she has been on the FCHS wrestling team for two and a half years.

"You have to be driven and hard-working," she said. "You see the results that you get from putting all this work in. My dad got me into it and has been so supportive. My team has been supportive too. Even though it is an individual sport — the team atmosphere has just been so connected. We're all there for each other, helping each other out."

She said being a wrestling state champion is wonderful.

"It's nice to know that all my hard work paid off," Sutton said. "I've been working hard and I'm glad I accomplished my goal. You have to be determined, focused, eat healthy and work out. You have to stay disciplined during tournaments. You have your goal, and you have to stay disciplined."

"I'm passionate about taking care of animals and being around them, and a veterinary science career will allow me to do that."

Hamilton High School senior spotlight: Gwendolyn Wolfe

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA

@ravallirepublic.com

Hamilton High School has chosen to highlight graduating senior Gwendolyn Wolfe.

She has attended Hamilton Schools since kindergarten and said the school system is great.

"I love all the people here," Wolfe said. "I love my friends and have great teachers. I feel like it has shaped me to be who I am. My teachers have taught me not only subject areas but also life lessons."

She said one of the big lessons is that she is a "big procrastinator" and works hard to get her work completed when it is assigned.

"After attending school here, I feel ready to be on my own," Wolfe said. "I like all my subjects and am drawn to who teaches them. I've taken all four years of math just because Mr. Fett is such a great teacher. I learn math easily from him, so I find it a fun class to take. I like English and have always had good English teachers."

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA, RAVALLI REPUBLIC

Gwendolyn "Gwen" Wolfe is Hamilton High School's Spotlight Senior.

Wolfe is senior class president and part of student council.

"I took the Leadership Class and did my bone marrow registration drive," she said. "It turned out great. I got 20 in-person swabs and a lot of people signed up online and had swab kits shipped to their house. I'm super happy with how it turned out. I hope to continue that in college where I think it will be more successful due to the age restrictions."

Wolfe is also president of the National Honor Society.

"This year we coordinated with the Dolly Parton Imagination Library, which is an organization that will give kids, from 0 to 5, a book every month until they turn five," she said. "Reading is super important. We also teamed up with Key Club and cleaned the highway up Skalkaho and picked up a lot of trash. We did a pet food and supply drive for the Bitter Root Humane Association."

Wolfe said her family is her motivation to do volunteer work.

"My grandma and my mom have made super big impacts on the community of Hamilton, and I want to do my part as well," she said.

Wolfe is planning to attend the University of Utah and study biochemistry on a pre-pharmacy track.

"I was accepted into their honors college where 70% of them get accepted into their top choice of grad school," she said. "I feel like it is a good place for me to go."

Principal Marlin Lewis said that Wolfe has been involved and engaged at HHS.

"She is the senior class and National Honor Society president as well a four year participant in soccer, tennis and band," he said. "Gwen will be missed at HHS, and I wish her the best at Utah State University."

COST OF COLLEGE | Q&A

Funding your future

Here's what to know about student loans

ALEX BRANDON, ASSOCIATED PRESS

ADRIANA MORGA | Associated Press

If you're heading to college or thinking about where you'd like to apply, you're probably considering funding options.

According to the Federal Reserve, 30% of all U.S. adults said they incurred at least some debt for their education. Borrowers owe a collective $1.77 trillion in student loan debt, including federal and private loans.

"Borrowing is almost at the point where it's a requirement," said Dana Kelly of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators.

It's beneficial to have an idea of what professional field you want to pursue, calculate how much you need to borrow and understand interest.

Where and when do I start?

Apply for federal student loans through the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, or FAFSA, for the 2024-25 school year to help determine if you qualify for federal or state financial aid. You'll fill out the application each year.

Cathy Mueller, executive director of Mapping Your Future, a nonprofit that helps people navigate higher education, recommends exhausting every possible funding option to reduce the amount you need to borrow. For scholarships, check out the College Board's scholarship search directory.

Mueller recommends that you estimate the amount you will need to borrow for your entire college career and be realistic about what you will be able to pay back. The Debt/Salary wizard from Mapping Your Future is an interactive calculator that can help.

Check your state's deadline to apply for state financial aid. Aid is first-come, first-served, so apply as soon as you can.

For private student loans, lenders require proof of enrollment, so experts recommend you apply a couple months before your tuition is due.

What's the difference between federal and private loans?

Federal student loans are backed by the government and private loans come from banks, credit unions or other private institutions.

In general, federal student loans offer lower interest rates and more opportunities for affordable repayment plans. They also require you to complete an entrance counseling course.

Kelly recommends that students try to use only federal student loans.

Private loans come with a different set of prerequisites and application process.

What are subsidized and unsubsidized loans?

There are several different federal student loan options: direct subsidized loans, direct unsubsidized loans, direct PLUS loans and direct consolidation loans.

Subsidized loans have their interest covered by the government and are granted to students with demonstrated financial need while they're in school at least half-time, for six months after graduation and if they qualify for deferment, which allows someone to temporarily stop making payments. Students are responsible for paying the interest on unsubsidized loans.

What should I know about interest rates?

Student loans must be paid back with interest — additional money you pay for borrowing.

The interest depends on your type of loan and when it was made available. If your loan is disbursed on or after July 1, 2023, but before July 1, 2024, you will have a fixed interest rate of 5.5%.

Mueller recommends paying some of the interest each year.

"You're not required to make those interest-only payments," she said. "But if you do, you're saving yourself money in the long run."

For more personal finance advice, point your phone camera at this code, then tap the link for thepennywise.com. NEWSVU

What should I do before I sign?

Before you accept your student loan offer, make sure you understand the details, said Betsy Mayotte, president of The Institute of Student Loan Advisors. Those include when interest accrues, if it is capitalized and if there are any late fees. She also recommends speaking with a financial aid counselor at your university or elsewhere.

Kelly said good questions to ask include:

1 If I get this amount of a loan as a freshman, is that rate going to be flat over my four years? Or do you anticipate that I'm going to need to borrow more each year?

2 Does my opportunity for scholarships go up so the amount I need to borrow can come down?

Many resources are available; you can visit the Federal Student Aid website or reach out to your college's financial aid office or community or nonprofit organizations.

What if I get more than I need?

Mueller recommends you return money you don't need. To do so, contact your school's financial aid office.

Surviving graduation season

Juggling parties, gifts? Ditch stress with these ideas for every budget

BURL GILYARD | Star Tribune

Graduation season is a time of celebrating accomplishments and extending best wishes for life's next chapter, but it can also be a time of stress when juggling party planning and gift decisions.

In the National Retail Federation's annual graduation gift survey from last year, feedback from more than 8,400 consumers found people expected to spend an average of $116.19 for graduation gifts, with 52% planning to give cash instead of shopping for an item. And for those hosting instead of attending grad festivities, or organizing a celebration could involve a lot of money and time.

Even if your own family doesn't have any graduates this year, it's likely you will have at least one graduation party to attend this season for a family member, friend or neighbor.

If you need help figuring out how to survive this busy time of year, here's some expert advice to follow:

For those attending

Graduation parties might be largely informal, but there is still some etiquette to keep in mind, said Lizzie Post, co-president of the Vermont-based Emily Post Institute. Post is a great-great-granddaughter of Emily Post, who published the book "Etiquette" in 1922.

Despite any social pressure you might feel about buying a gift, Post said it's not obligatory.

Post said it's become a trend for graduation party hosts to push "money apps" like Venmo for gifts, but she maintains: "It's really rude." Cash itself remains a perfectly acceptable gift, even if it has disappeared from many corners of society.

After the event, Post said you should expect a handwritten thank-you note from the graduate if you gave a gift (not just a text or email).

If cash or a check doesn't feel right for you, but you still want to give the grad in your life some token, a Google search can show dozens of vetted options via lists from various publications. Forbes Vetted published its "55 Best Graduation Gifts In 2024" in March. Many ideas were less than $100.

If invited to a fancy restaurant for the party, you should make an effort to dress appropriately, Post said, so your clothes fit the occasion. But in many cases — like the ever-popular driveway buffet or park picnic — going casual works just fine.

For those hosting

Advance planning is essential if you're trying to hold an event-style graduation party, event planner Kat Minks said. Minks said the ideal time for mailing invitations is in March or April for parties held in June or July. So mark your calendars if you have a graduate in 2025. If you're just starting now, evites are a quicker route, or you could have a party later in the summer to avoid some of the rush.

For some, a do-it-yourself party is the best option. Check local shops for DIY party supplies such as banners, balloons, decor, confetti, guest books, card boxes and more.

Justin Alexander, general manager of Litin's Party Value in Minneapolis, said people tend to underestimate how many people will show up to the party, so he recommends shopping early and planning ahead. The store's most popular items, he said, have the graduation year "2024" emblazoned on them, while the second-most popular items feature the various school colors.

Prices will vary depending how many supplies you buy, but $2.50 to $3.50 per guest is a reasonable estimate. An event planner could also take on some of the stress, for a fee.

Food trucks have emerged in recent years as an increasingly popular option for graduation parties, but if that seems like too much, many stores offer a range of party trays for sandwiches, veggies, fruits and more. Popular restaurants also have catering packages. For example, Chipotle has premade burrito boxes and build-your-own setups for $8.75 a person.

Some grads might not want just afternoon conversation and Bluetooth-speaker music, so explore a gathering at an entertainment venue.

Reserving a picnic shelter at a local park and supplying your own lawn games or heading to a lake beach for water sports are some other lower-cost options.

Whether you're going to a celebration or putting it on, the one aspect to keep in mind is the graduates themselves. Make sure whatever gift you give, food you serve or party you plan suits the grad's personality.

If the student is going to acting school, rent a screen to show recordings of his school performances. If your grad loves popcorn, serve all of her favorite kinds at the party.

Make the event special and unique so it will remain a cherished memory for years to come.

Hamilton Christian Academy spotlights three

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA

michelle.mcconnaaha@ravallirepublic.com

Hamilton Christian Academy has three graduates this year.

Olivie Crosier, Taisia Matveev and Grace Thomas said the private Christian school has helped them see life with an eye on the prize of glorifying God and walking in His ways.

Olivie Crosier attended three years and said she appreciates the educators at Hamilton Christian Academy.

“We have great teachers,” she said. “All of our teachers care very much about us. They are very much one-on-one a lot of the time with students.”

She fondly recalled using a modified game of Jeopardy to help memorize materials in Bible class and said she enjoyed the “egg drop” challenge in science class.

“Our principal [Matt Zwicker] got on the roof and dropped the eggs off,” Crosier said. “We had to build a contraption to help the egg not crack in its shell. It was really fun and challenging.”

Last year, she was vice-president of student council.

Crosier is currently working on her certified medical assistant license and plans to attend the University of Montana for an applied sciences degree and certification in culinary arts and hospitality services.

Taisia Matveev has attended HCA for six years and she said history is often her favorite subject, depending on the educator.

She said she appreciates HCA for building her faith.

“Coming here definitely helped my faith expand and I’ve really enjoyed coming here,” Matveev said. “My faith was expanded by chapel once a week and just having more of a good influence here.”

She plays the flute, sings and was president of student council.

She is planning on taking a gap year to go to Oregon, live with her family and work while she decides on her future.

Grace Thomas attended for nine years and said Hamilton Christian Academy has had a positive impact on her life.

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA, RAVALLI REPUBLIC

Olivie Crosier, Taisia Matveev and Grace Thomas are graduating from Hamilton Christian Academy with fond memories of their time in the school that helped them expand and deepen their faith.

“I like HCA because you can cultivate your walk with Christ,” she said. “You can develop your faith more. You can talk to each other, relate more and share experiences. The teachers are great here too.”

She is also taking a gap year after graduation.

“I want to know what God has planned for me and what he wants me to do with my life,” Thomas said. “I just want a year off after school without the pressure of classes and deadlines to figure out what to do.”

She hopes to be a coffee barista and a ranch hand while she’s pondering the future.

Chrisi Kelly, HCA Lead for grades 7-12 and History teacher for grades 9-12, said she values the three graduates.

“They are amazing, self-starters and just want to do well and succeed,” Kelly said. “They are powerhouses in their own lives — in and out of school. It is fun to see how they have bonded — friendships have grown. Individually they are powerhouses and together they are a fierce force for good. They are stellar humans and I’m super proud. I have been blessed to see them grow.”

Experts share tips for high school graduates who are undecided about their paths

KATHLEEN FURORE
Tribune Content Agency

Graduation season is fast approaching, and while many high school seniors have plans in place for life post-high school, others aren't sure what their next step will be.

"Sadly, many of our kids today are just not adequately prepared to make informed, confident decisions about what they want to do after high school," says Jean Eddy, president and CEO of education nonprofit American Student Assistance.

"More than 65% of students feel they would have benefited from more career exploration in middle or high school, ... and only 47% of respondents who identified as members of Generation Z said they had enough information to decide what pathway was best for them after high school," Eddy says.

The good news?

"We know from research that the views of employers, prospective employees as well as policymakers are evolving rapidly regarding non-degree pathways," Eddy adds.

Krystal Hicks, founder of the career counseling practice JobTalk LLC, echoes Eddy.

"Higher education and trade schools have also evolved, and there is no longer pressure from institutions to roll right into one after high school," Hicks says.

Here, career experts offer their advice to soon-to-graduate students who aren't sure what the next year or so will hold.

1 Don't compare yourself to others

"Try not to fall victim to the comparison syndrome with your friends who seemingly 'have it all figured out,'" Hicks stresses. "One of the biggest mistakes I see young people — and their parents — make is to try and force themselves into college when they're not ready or interested. It can make for an expensive mistake."

2 Talk with a guidance counselor

"Each high school will have access to career path resources," says Stacie Garlieb, president of Successful Impressions LLC, who teaches career search skills. "This is a great first step for someone who isn't sure what direction to go."

3 Take a gap year

This can range from participating in national service programs like AmeriCorps' City Year or NCCC to taking a job to "gain job skills and training in a place that feels interesting to you," Hicks says. "I've seen recent grads work hospitality, administrative and food/customer service jobs for a year after graduation and then get promoted into other internal functions of the business shortly after. There is a ton of value to afford yourself the time and opportunity to explore different jobs and build your skills."

4 Think about trade school or apprenticeship programs

"If you don't want to continue sitting in a classroom setting, possibly consider trade schools or apprenticeship programs where you can get certifications in specialized fields," Garlieb suggests.

Athena Kan, CEO of Dreambound, a company that helps people to find and pay for vocational training programs, also recommends exploring options in the trades. "Trades jobs offer a unique opportunity for people to get started in a high-paying job quickly, working without a college degree and instead getting trained in just a few months," Kan explains, noting the trades include industries such as HVAC, IT and health care, to name a few.

5 Consider community college

"Community college is affordable and often free; you can also transfer college credits, figure out what you want to do and save money," Kan says.

Explore jobs that offer educational benefits. Hicks and Kan note that many employers now offer tuition reimbursement. "Imagine chipping away at a bachelor's degree or trade program at your own pace and eventually graduating without any student loan debt," Hicks says.

"Some will even pair you with an adviser who can help coach you to get into the right school and program for you," Kan adds.

Advice for younger students

For students not on the cusp of entering post-high school life, Jean Eddy, president and CEO of education nonprofit American Student Assistance, offers these tips:

Explore careers early, starting in middle school.

"Seek out free student-directed, digital-first learning experiences beyond the classroom, such as American Student Assistance's Futurescape, a mobile-first experience that enables career exploration aligned with teens' interests.

Access work-based learning opportunities in high school.

These can include in-person or virtual paid internships, job-shadowing, micro-internships and pre-apprenticeships, Eddy says. "Students should test and 'try on' as much as they can, in order to learn about all viable postsecondary education and career pathways, including non-degree options." ExpandOpportunities.org is one resource on non-degree pathways that Eddy recommends.

6 Check out career websites

Katie Schwartz, the founder of Business Speech Improvement, which provides coaching and communication resources, suggests checking out the "remarkable website" nccareers.org for guidance.

"It offers free online testing and a chance to learn more about many careers," Schwartz says.

Kathleen Furore is a Chicago-based writer and editor. You can email her your career questions at kfurore@yahoo.com.

Try not to compare yourself with your friends. "One of the biggest mistakes I see young people — and their parents — make is to force themselves into college when they're not ready or interested. It can make for an expensive mistake," says Krystal Hicks, founder of the career counseling practice JobTalk LLC.

Stevensville High School senior spotlight: Gunnar Larson

michelle.mcconnaha@ravallirepublic.com

Stevensville High School has chosen to highlight graduating senior Gunnar Larson.

SHS Principal Eric Larson said Gunnar is an “absolute relation.”

“As principals I think our kids get ripped off a little bit, but I asked around and the counselor recommended Gunnar,” he said. “I agree. I’m not going to keep him out of it just because he is my son. He is high achieving in his studies, a two-sport athlete and he coaches a second-grade team of flag football.”

Gunnar Larson was the recipient of the “Number Zero Legacy” at SHS.

“It’s like Griz number 37 but it is our own, number zero for outstanding leadership,” Principal Larson said. “His whole career he’s been the quiet leader and when he does say something everybody listens. He’s always doing the right thing, even when nobody is looking. He is kind to everyone, keeps his nose to the grindstone and gets it done.”

Principal Larson said that with straight A’s Gunnar was coveted by many schools, had scholarship opportunities, and offers to play college football. But he is realistic and has other plans.

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA, RAVALLI REPUBLIC

“Quiet leader” Gunnar Larson is the Stevensville High School spotlight senior.

“He said, ‘Dad, I don’t want to waste anyone’s time or money if I don’t know what I want to do,’” Larson said. “He was just hired by the United States Forest Service and will be fighting fire out of the West Fork Ranger Station.

We graduate June 1; he goes to work June 4. He’s going to start an adventure and see if the Forest Service is what he wants to do.”

Gunnar Larson attended Stevensville schools from fourth grade and was involved in wrestling, football, two years of FFA and club sports.

“My favorite part of SHS is that I’ve seen the remodel get done,” he said. “It was awesome. “My grade went through all the construction changes and now it is great. I’d argue that it is one of the nicest schools in the valley because everything is new. I love the environment.”

As for favorite classes, Gunnar selected the physical education classes offered at SHS.

“I love the physical education department including weightlifting and motion classes,” Gunnar said. “Mr. William teaches that. We also got a big weight room. His weightlifting classes are probably my favorite because they are in such a great environment that he puts on for us.”

Larson’s future plans include wildland fire fighting.

“I’m on a crew at the West Fork Ranger Station and start two days after graduation,” he said. “I’ll be there for the summer and see what it’s like, maybe helicopter crews. I got drawn to it because it is outdoors and federal jobs are cool with benefits.”

Victor High School senior spotlight:

Taylor McKinley-Whitcomb

MICHELLE MCCONNAHA

michelle.mcconnaha@ravallirepublic.com

Victor High School has chosen to highlight graduating senior Taylor McKinley-Whitcomb.

She has attended Victor schools for 13 years and is the president of the senior class, the Student Council, National Honor Society and FFA.

McKinley-Whitcomb said the school is great because of its size.

"We are such a small school we are like a family here," she said. "You are a family — your friends are your family; the teachers are your family. We are one big family. The community is like a family too."

McKinley-Whitcomb participated in volleyball and basketball and was selected for the All-Conference team this year for volleyball. And, of course, she was team captain of both sports. She had back surgery and didn't get to complete the basketball season and will not pursue volleyball in college.

As for her leadership qualities, McKinley-Whitcomb is humble.

"I've always been told I am a leader," she said. "I just like to step up. I enjoy having kids look up to me, especially younger kids in FFA. It is heartwarming."

She enjoys hunting, fishing, hiking and camping.

"Just everything outdoors — I love the outdoors," she said.

For her favorite classes she selected chemistry and agriculture.

"I'm going to nursing school, so I like chemistry," McKinley-Whitcomb said. "Any Ag class because I'm super involved in FFA. My favorite teacher is Mrs. Worthington. I love her. I definitely think having her classes keeps me involved. I also really like Superintendent Woodard. She has changed this school around a lot."

McKinley-Whitcomb plans to go to Montana Tech in Butte for four years to attend nursing school. She has already started her career path by working at Bitterroot Health in Hamilton as a "patient sitter," and assisting nurses and certified nursing assistants (CNAs).

She described being a "patient sitter" as just being present and helping by caring.

"I sit with suicidal patients, mental patients and older patients who just can't be by themselves," McKinley-Whitcomb said. "I'm just assisting them in a lot of things, making sure they aren't getting out of bed and not pulling things out of their arms."

McKinley-Whitcomb said nursing is a calling that she's heard all her life.

"Growing up in hospitals all my life, I've had numerous surgeries and been around doctors," she said. "They make an impact on you and also on your family. Doctors and nurses are the role models of the world. I strive to be a leader and change the world. To me, nurses care but don't expect anything in return. That's okay. I would love to change a person's life. I cannot wait to be a nurse."

She hopes to return to Bitterroot Health as an RN when her studies are complete.

"The valley feels like home," McKinley-Whitcomb said. "I'm a homebody and everyone feels like family. We're so welcoming. I hope to return and make an impact on my community because this community has shaped me. I want to show that I care and love my soon to be patients."

She is the middle of five children, has three dogs and said her grandmother, Debbie Clarke, is her best friend.

McKinley-Whitcomb is also working towards her pilot's license.

"I started that when I was 15 but quit for a while when my dad died," she said. "I just started back up. I can't wait to change the world. I think I definitely chose the right path for myself."

Victor Librarian Amber Lynch said, "Taylor McKinley is the student and superhero that the world only experiences on occasion."

"She is the girl who has already made such a positive impact on her school, valley and state," Lynch said. "She will now share that positive impact with a greater part of the world. Taylor carries hope, poise and kindness for her generation."
