T The Oscars draw Hollywood's best and brightest amid controversy

By Jacqueline Spendlove
TV Media

It's a long, long night that seems to get longer every year, but awards-show junkies care not a whit for that. On the contrary, millions are excited — or at the very least, willing — to settle in for the Super Bowl of awards season as the crème de la crème of the acting world swarm into Hollywood's Dolby Theatre to honor the best films of 2015. Amidst controversy, cries for boycotting and some significant changes on the horizon, the 88th Annual Academy Awards airs Sunday, Feb. 28, on ABC.

In 1940, at the 12th Academy Awards, Hattie McDaniel won the Oscar for Best Supporting Actress for her iconic performance as Mammy in Best Picture recipient "Gone With the Wind" (1939). This marked the first time a black actor or actress received the award.

Including McDaniel, only 14 black actors have won acting Oscars in the ceremony's 88-year history. There's no chance of that number going up this year, either, since, like last year, all 20 actors in the lead and supporting acting categories are white.

You can't talk about this year's Academy Awards without addressing the controversy — and the trending Twitter hashtag #Oscar-SoWhite — that this lack of diversity has sparked. Indeed, it's fast becoming a major focus of the Oscars during the lead-up to the ceremony. Adding fuel to the fire are the announcements from numerous stars decrying the "whiteout," with some declaring their intent to boycott the awards all together.

"Malcolm X" (1992) writer and honorary recipient Spike Lee wrote on Instagram that he and his wife "cannot support" the Oscars and therefore would not be attending, while Will Smith ("Men in Black," 1997) and wife Jada Pinkett Smith ("Collateral," 2004) both separately announced their intention to boycott the event.

Hosting the Oscars for the second time is audacious comedian Chris Rock ("Grown Ups," 2010), whose comedy is generally peppered with race-related material. Rock was invited to host long before the nominations spawned outrage, and while some have called for him to step down in support of the boycott, Rock is taking a different tack. Oscars producer Reginald Hudlin revealed to "Entertainment Tonight" that the comedian's original completed monolog has been scrapped, and the rewritten material is sure to include some digs directly related to the controversy.

"As things got a little provocative and excited, he said: 'I'm throwing out the show I wrote and I'm writing a new show,'" Hudlin said. "Chris is that thorough. He's that brilliant, and I have 1,000 percent confidence that he will deliver something that people will be talking about for weeks."

Rock's longtime collaborator Ali LeRoi confirms that a comedian like Rock is the best possible choice to host amidst the negative feelings surrounding the ceremony.

"If this was [last year's host] Neil Patrick Harris, it would be two minutes of 'Oscars-are-so-white jokes,'" he said in an NPR interview. "But everyone's going: 'Oh my god, it's Chris Rock. What's he gonna do?'"

Of course, there are just as many in the acting community — black and white — that staunchly defend the academy and its choices. In any case, the controversy has helped bring about some much-needed changes in the academy's membership, which is notoriously old, white and male.

A week after the nominations, the governing board unanimously voted to double female and minority members by 2020, allowing for better representation among those voting in the nominees. Furthermore, the previously lifelong voting status has been changed to 10 years, to be renewed only if the member has remained active in the industry during that time. After three 10-year terms, or if the member has won or been nominated for an Oscar, lifelong voting rights are instated.

Controversy or not, the movies and performers gunning to take home the little golden man aren't to be denied their moment in the sun.
