End in sight for many Ellicottville CTE Center projects

By Deb Everts

ELLIOTTVILLE — Many students at the CTE Center in Ellicottville have been working on their capstone projects for several months, but the end of the school year and the culmination of all their hard work is in sight. Junior and senior students in the automotive technology have been busy restoring two vehicles owned by a student and his family of another student, one being the restoration of a 1968 Dodge Daytona Shelby Turbo, the other the Gaskins. Guidance counselor Joseph Colligan said the projects involve many hours of body work with the students welding, sanding, priming and painting.

"The end is near for three kids, each of which spent about two hours a day, six days a week, getting these vehicles ready to show," said the assistant principal. "There's still plenty of work to do before the final show, but the kids are doing a great job, especially considering they have to do this in addition to their regular schoolwork."

Students in the Automotive Technology and Construction Trades classes have been working on a large shed, both the students and the teachers have been working on it for several months. The shed is expected to be completed in mid-May.
