New Fox comedy celebrates the post-college struggle

By Jacqueline Spendlove
TV Media

Every spring, countless wide-eyed 20-somethings cross a stage, pick up a diploma and shake the Dean's hand, envisioning what they're going to do, what esteemed and high-paying position they'll soon hold now that college is finally behind them and real life is about to begin.

Of course, reality soon sets in. There are loans to repay and the economy stinks and no one's hiring and what the heck job does an Arts degree get you anyway? You're flat broke, you still can't cook and not once, in the countless hours you spent in classrooms and lecture halls, did anyone teach you how to produce a well-crafted resumé. True adulthood, as it turns out, is still a long way off.

The coming-of-age story has long been explored on screen, and now Fox is presenting its own look at life after college in "Cooper Barrett's Guide to Surviving Life," premiering Sunday, Jan. 3 on Fox.

Fox is really delivering on the comedies this season. The Emmy- and Golden Globe-winning "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" just wrapped its third successful season, while the ever-popular "New Girl" is about to kick off its fifth. "Grandfathered" and "The Grinder," two sitcoms new to the fall lineup, have secured full-season orders, while "Scream Queens," which debuted in September, won the Critics' Choice Television Award for Most Exciting New Series. Clearly, "Cooper Barrett," already extended from six episodes to 13, is in good company.

When we meet the titular Cooper Barrett, played by blue-eyed Brit Jack Cutmore-Scott ("Kingsman: The Secret Service," 2014), he's graduating college, moving into a new apartment with his friends and getting ready for life as a learned adult. As the series progresses, however, it becomes clear that he's still got an awful lot to learn.

The show is a frank and funny celebration of the types of idiotic mistakes and absurd misadventures that many of us encounter in that half-adult period of our 20s, when we're no longer students but not yet in a position to settle down. As Cooper says in the pilot: "No one has ever bothered to properly prepare anyone for this next decade of your life ... until now."

The premise of the show is that, through his own mistakes, embarrassments and dubious exploits, Cooper serves as a guide for his fellow 20-something Americans who struggle to navigate life and love during this transitory phase of life.

"Your 20s feel like one decade-long practical joke that everyone over the age of 30 is playing on you," said Cutmore-Scott in a promo. "Cooper is essentially your lens of 'don't do what I did' — all the while, kind of clueing us into the fact that the joke is actually pretty funny.'"

He also compares his character to famed goof-offer Ferris Bueller: "You go with [Cooper] on the journey, no matter what happens."

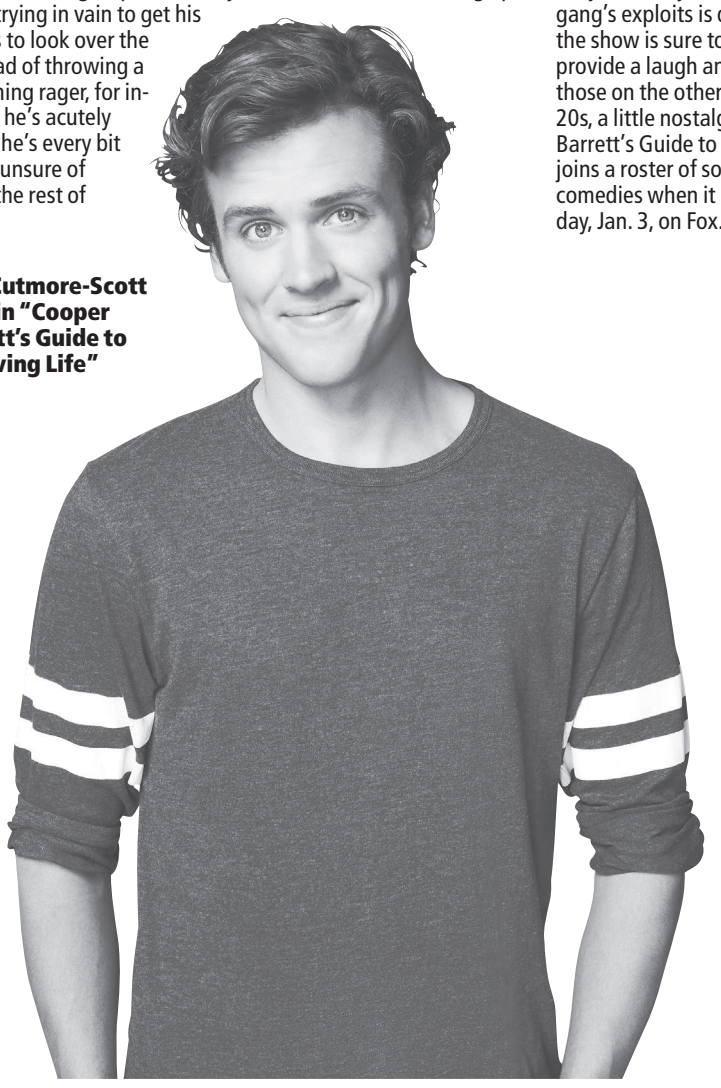

His equally goofy pals help with all of that. Barry (James Earl, "Ground Floor") is, as Cutmore-Scott describes him, the show's "disaster waiting to happen." He's huge, loud and completely over-the-top, but loveable despite his clownish destructiveness. Naive, bespectacled and decidedly un-suave Neal (Charlie Saxton, "Hung") would like to see himself as the group's voice of reason (trying in vain to get his roommates to look over the lease instead of throwing a housewarming rager, for instance) but he's acutely aware that he's every bit as lost and unsure of himself as the rest of them.

The token gal pal of the group is Kelly (Meaghan Rath, "Being Human"), their sharp and free-spirited new neighbor who, while so far just friends with Cooper and his buddies, is plainly being set up as a potential love interest for the show's lead. After all, no sitcom would be complete without the will-they-won't-they scenario that's practically a staple in the genre.

Cooper's older brother, Josh (Justin Bartha, "The Hangover," 2009), is a clear foil for the rowdy and wayward trio. Having opened his own law firm at 22 and married at 23, Josh is a perfect example of how you're "supposed" to do things after graduating college. He's aware now, however, that he missed a lot of opportunities and failed to live his young years to the fullest. In taking up with Cooper and his friends, Josh sees the opportunity for a second chance at his 20s — to let loose, be irresponsible and make some bad decisions, despite being 37 and married with a baby on the way.

Rounding off the group is Josh's wife, Leslie, a successful lawyer who, as actress Liza Lapira ("Crazy, Stupid, Love," 2011) describes her character, is, of the six of them, the closest to having it all together. Indeed, she's at the opposite end of the spectrum from the rest of the gang and Josh, though he loves her dearly, refers to her as a "fun sucker." She symbolizes all the things Josh is trying to escape as he joins his much-younger cohorts in their carefree antics.

Whether or not viewers can truly learn anything from the gang's exploits is debatable, but the show is sure to entertain and provide a laugh and perhaps, for those on the other side of their 20s, a little nostalgia. "Cooper Barrett's Guide to Surviving Life" joins a roster of solid prime-time comedies when it premieres Sunday, Jan. 3, on Fox.

Sicario

After a raid on a group of suspected kidnappers, idealistic FBI Agent Kate Macer (Blunt) and her partner, Reggie Wayne (Kaluuya), are assigned to a task force headed by agents Matt Graver (Brolin) and Alejandro Gillick (Del Toro), a former Mexican prosecutor, in order to bring Mexican drug cartel boss Manuel Díaz (Saracino) to justice. Upon their arrival in Mexico, Macer and Wayne are given the task of escorting one of Díaz's officers stateside to interrogate him, but information recently gained from interrogations sets in motion a chain of violent events that shake Macer's ideals and expectations to their very core.

The end is nigh

British megahit 'Downton Abbey's' last season premieres on PBS

The end is nigh: The final season of one of television's most celebrated dramas kicks off on PBS this week, a bittersweet event for the millions of fans who are both psyched to see new episodes and sorry to see the show end. Season 6 of "Downton Abbey" premieres Sunday, Jan. 3, on PBS.

"Downton Abbey" was something of a phenomenon when it premiered on BBC in September 2010. By the time it became available to North American audiences on PBS in January 2011, it seemed as if the whole world was buzzing about the juicy drama. American audiences devoured it as eagerly as the British had, and a television legend was born.

The series follows the residents — both the aristocratic owners, the Crawleys, and their servants — of a Yorkshire country estate. The series weaves its way through an interesting time in British history, beginning the day after the 1912 sinking of the Titanic and ending in the year 1925.

So far, the series has followed the Crawley family and their household through the First Balkan War, the women's suffrage movement, the First World War, an outbreak of the Spanish flu, the Irish War of Independence and a few other significant events along the way. But while the historical ontext (not to mention the fabulous sets and wardrobe) adds a certain authenticity to the show, it's the interpersonal drama that keeps viewers coming back for more.

This season being the last, fans can expect to see many of the ongoing storylines wrap up. Carson (Jim Carter, "The Golden Compass," 2007) and Mrs. Hughes (Phyllis Logan, "Lovejoy") take some major steps forward in their relationship; Branson (Allen Leech, "The Imitation Game," 2014) begins his new life in America; and Lady Mary (Michelle Dockery, "Self/less," 2015) makes some major life decisions that hopefully will lead her to a happy and fulfilling place by the end of the series.

"Downton" fans likely don't need to be told the series premiere approaches — they've been waiting for it with bated breath. Season 6 of the hit drama starts Sunday, Jan. 3, on PBS.

Medieval musical: A new season of ABC's musical comedy is about to begin, and this one promises even more musical laughs than the last. The network is calling it a "five-week comedy extravaganza," which is a step up from last year, which was only a "four-week comedy extravaganza."

"Galavant" is a musical series set in medieval times where a king (Timothy Omundson, "Psych") has stolen away the woman (Mallory Jansen, "Young & Hungry") that the eponymous Galavant (Joshua Sasse, "Rogue") loves. The whole first season revolved around a plan to win back the beautiful maiden, but things very quickly went awry, and the plot twisted and turned throughout the four weeks — all to a soundtrack of catchy tunes and clever lyrics, of course.

While last season's ratings numbers were not phenomenal, they were good enough to score a renewal, thanks, in part, to the exceptional star power the series managed to accrue. "Downton Abbey" star Hugh Bonneville, comedy musician "Weird Al" Yankovic and comedian Ricky Gervais ("Derek") made musical appearances in the show, as well as John Stamos ("Full House"), Anthony Head ("Buffy the Vampire Slayer") and Rutger Hauer ("Blade Runner," 1982).

With more singing, swashbuckling and steamy romance to come, season 2 promises to resolve some of last year's cliffhangers and take viewers on a brand-new exciting journey. Don't miss this premiere of "Galavant," airing Sunday, Jan. 3, on ABC.

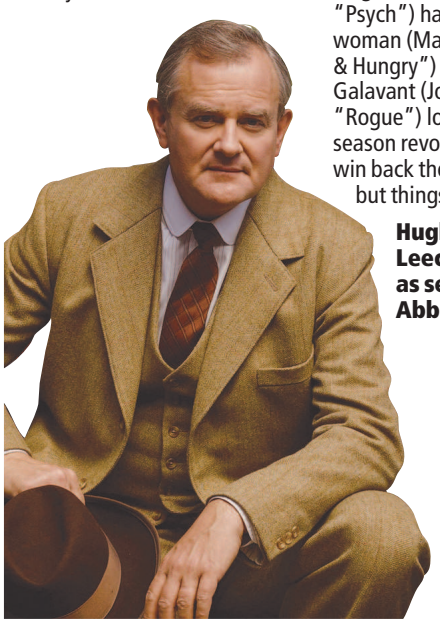

Wild comedy: It's been a phenomenal few years for the Duplass Brothers. Mark and Jay Duplass are everywhere at the moment — both enjoy continuing guest spots in "The Mindy Project"; Mark has starred in critically acclaimed films such as "The One I Love" (2014), his HBO show "Togetherness" is a big hit, and his previous project, "The League," is wrapping up after seven successful seasons; Jay is the showrunner for "Togetherness" and also stars in the groundbreaking, Golden Globe-winning series "Transparent."

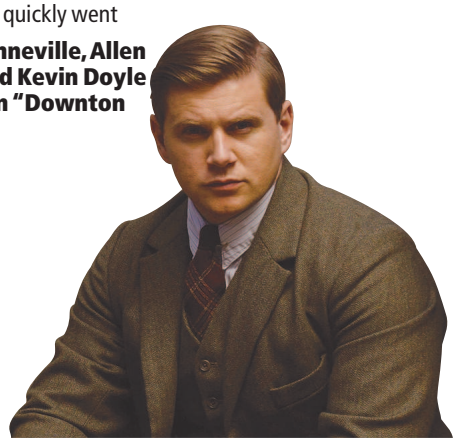

HBO is adding another major credit to the resumé of both brothers: two seasons of the animated series "Animals," produced by Duplass Brothers Productions, have been ordered, and the show is set to premiere on the premiere cable network Friday, Feb. 5.

The first two episodes of the series were screened at this year's Sundance Film Festival and garnered great reviews, which ultimately led to HBO's offer. The show looks at the world through the eyes of the lowliest creatures living in New York City — rats, bedbugs, pigeons and more. Its charm and wit hard to resist, it's likely to be another hit for both the Duplass brothers and HBO.

In an interview with Variety, Mark said: "Jay and I have been excited about bringing the principles of indie film to the TV space, and to have our first real experiment land at a place like HBO for two seasons is beyond what we could have imagined."

"Animals" premieres Friday, Feb. 5, on HBO.

Q&A Hollywood

By Adam Thomlison

Q: Will "If Loving You is Wrong" on OWN be coming back? If so, when?

A: Even the tireless Tyler Perry needs a break now and again. And so do his shows. "If Loving You Is Wrong" is on a break, but it's definitely coming back.

The mid-season finale of the show's second season aired at the beginning of December. It was the 11th episode of the season, meaning it was the true halfway point, since OWN (the Oprah Winfrey Network) has committed to a 22-episode season. The last 11 episodes are scheduled to air starting in March.

"If Loving You Is Wrong" is a prime-time soap created by the incredibly prolific Tyler Perry, who may be better known for his big-screen fare, such as the Madea movies or his breakout hit, 2005's "Diary of a Mad Black Woman."

The network announced in February 2015 that "If Loving You Is Wrong" would be renewed for a 22-episode second season. The announcement came, in fact, during the mid-season break of the first season.

That one, too, premiered in September, took a break two months later, and aired the rest of the season starting in March. So while your concern for the fate of the show is certainly understandable, you can rest assured this is all part of the plan.

The show's ratings are strong enough that you shouldn't worry about it too much in the future, either. This season's premiere helped set a new record at the network — it aired on the same night as the season finale of another Tyler Perry series, "The Haves and the Have Nots," making for the most-watched night in OWN's history.

That is exactly why OWN has committed so fully to Perry. The network has four different series created by the actor/writer/director/generally famous person, the other two being the comedies "Love Thy Neighbor" and "For Better or Worse."

The network announced renewals of all four series at the same time last spring, at which time network president Erik Logan gushed about their "tremendous success, garnering millions of viewers for OWN."

Q: What did the other guys from "The Black Adder" do afterwards?

A: I'm going to assume by "the other guys" you mean Tony Robinson and Tim McInnerny, who the played faithful, albeit somewhat dim, manservants, Baldrick and Percy. Rowan Atkinson, as the Black Adder himself, was of course the star, but he's been pretty visible since.

Robinson, McInnerny and Atkinson are the only actors to feature in all four seasons (a number of other major stars, such as Stephen Fry and Hugh Laurie, appeared for a season or two).

Robinson is best known for hosting the long-running history-documentary series "Time Team." The series featured a team of archeologists given just three days to conduct digs around Britain, with Robinson on hand to explain their work to the non-archeologist viewers at home.

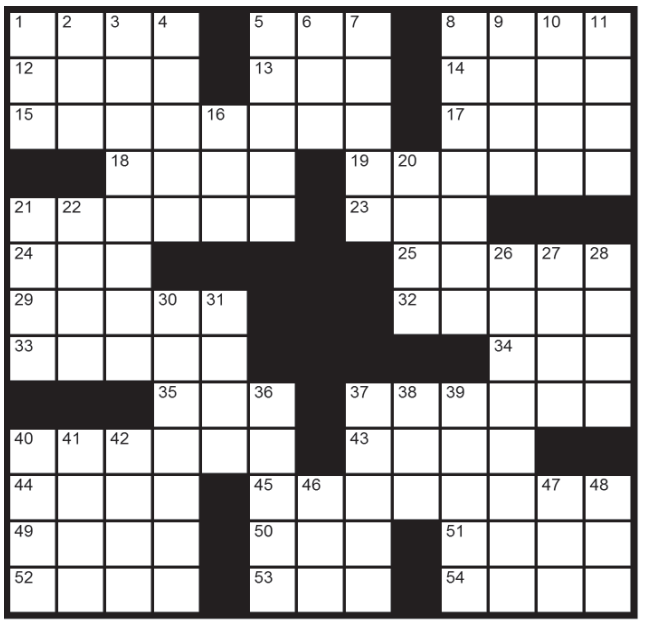

Though a 20-year run on the show would seem to have kept Robinson pretty busy since the most recent "Black Adder" season aired in 1989, he's actually managed to do quite a bit of other work as well. This includes a few sitcoms, such as "Maid Marian and her Merry Men" in the early '90s, and "My Wonderful Life" in the late '90s, and a number of other TV documentaries.

McInnerny's post-"Black Adder" work has mostly been supporting roles on the big screen. He had notable turns in the modern rom-com classic "Notting Hill" (1999) and the live-action "101 Dalmatians" (1996), among many other roles. He reunited with Atkinson in 2011 for the spy-spoof sequel "Johnny English Reborn."

Somewhat ironically, given their roles in "Black Adder," Robinson actually beat Atkinson to getting a knighthood — he became Sir Tony back in 2013. Atkinson had to make due with a paltry CBE (Commander of the British Empire) at the same ceremony.

Wallis (Wolff) has to get to know and write an essay about an older person. He decides to write one about his seemingly boring neighbor, Ashby Holt (Rourke). His expectations are shattered when, much to his surprise, he learns Holt is not only a former CIA assassin, but is also dying — he only has a few months to live. Having both seen and done a lot of terrible things throughout his life, Holt has decided to make peace with himself in his final months, and brings Ed along for the ride, teaching him some valuable life lessons along the way. Director: Tony McNamara. Stars: Nat Wolff, Mickey Rourke, Emma Roberts, Sarah Silverman, Kevin Dunn, Michael Lerner, Zachary Knighton. 2015. 100 min. Comedy/Drama.
