Salem

A city steeped in tradition and culture

Stand at the National Park Service Regional Visitor Center on New Liberty Street in Salem, and you are a short walk from many of the city's best sights.

But before setting off, be sure to check out the historical displays inside the center, describing Salem's rise from maritime powerhouse to manufacturing center to the vibrant city of today.

The park rangers are all knowledgeable and have an array of maps, brochures and books to help visitors find what they are looking for.

Walking in one direction, down Derby Street, will carry visitors toward the Salem Maritime National Historic Site, where they can duck into the orientation center.

They can also walk a half-mile out to the light station at the tip of Derby Wharf, which was begun in 1762 and was extended several times to accommodate all the ships that came into Salem. It is one of several wharves on the waterfront, along with Hatch, Central and Pickering.

Nathaniel Hawthorne worked in the Custom House, across the street, in an office that recorded the cargoes of schooners as they returned from their journeys. According to tour guides, the building has not changed since the last day the famous author of "The Scarlet Letter" worked there.

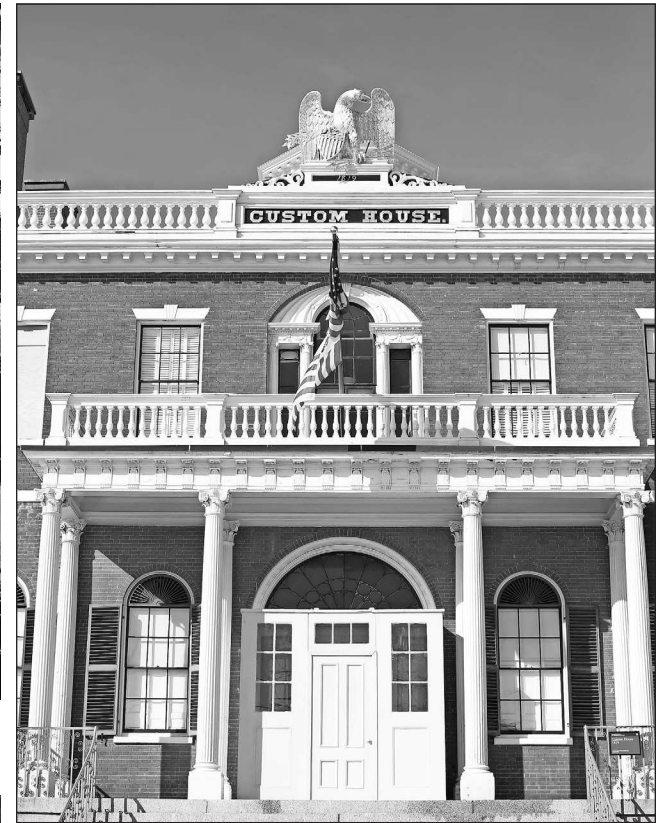

Further down Derby Street, The House of the Seven Gables — the inspiration behind Hawthorne's novel of that name — is on the National Register of Historic Places. The Gables is part of a campus that includes other historic properties.

Visitors who continue down Derby Street and onto Fort Avenue will soon run into Salem Willows, a favorite place for family entertainment and recreation.

Named for the graceful trees that still cast shade there in the park overlooking the water, the site is home to penny arcades, kiddie rides, ice cream and other treats, including the signature chop suey sandwiches that are a local tradition.

Walk a short distance in the other direction from the visitor center down the pedestrian mall to Salem's Old Town Hall and Derby Square, where performances and concerts are often held.

Across from Front Street, a number of artisans can be seen at work making pottery and furniture on Artists' Row, which is open until November.

Farther along Washington Street, a visitor can find many of Salem's busy restaurants, which range from coffee houses to high-end dining, along with ethnic favorites from Indian to Italian. Several of these venues feature entertainment with their meals, which has helped give Salem a vibrant night life.

Peabody Essex Museum, which stands directly across from the visitor center, exhibits furniture and paintings from Salem's earliest days, along with treasures that Salem's captains brought back from China and East Asia.

Finally, people who do not want to walk can still see the beautiful and historic sites by hopping on the Salem Trolley and taking one of its narrated tours.

Topsfield

Topsfield Fair ready for a milestone year

By WILL BROADDUS
STAFF WRITER

The Topsfield Fair is turning 200 this year, which is a long time by almost any measure. America has been served by 41 presidents during that span, while its population grew from 8 million to more than 300 million people.

But a better standard to judge the fair by would be the pleasure that crowds have experienced at its entertaining acts, rides and agricultural contests, which have kept them coming back for two centuries.

The Essex Agricultural Society, which first organized the fair and still sponsors it today, is celebrating this year's dual centennial with plenty of music, especially country music, as is only fitting for a country fair.

Country superstar Martina McBride will sing, and Country Music Hall of Famer Charlie Daniels will play his fiddle at the Topsfield Fair, which this year runs from Sept. 28 through Oct. 8.

Singer Sara Evans, who has had five No. 1 singles on the country charts, will also perform, and so will country newcomer Tegan Marie, who signed her first recording contract last year.

Other musical genres will be called upon to celebrate the fair's 200th birthday, as rock legend Chubby Checker reminds everyone how to twist (and also limbo), and Strictly Sinatra pays tribute to Ol' Blue Eyes.

The Topsfield Fair will start big, as always, when the giant pumpkins are forklifted to the scales for their weigh-in on Friday, Sept. 28. Topsfield's own Woody Lancaster won last year with 2,003.5 pounds of pumpkin, only the third 1-ton pumpkin at the fair since Ron Wallace from Rhode Island brought one in 2012.

A 2,000-pound pumpkin had long been giant pumpkin growing's equivalent of the four-minute mile, and Wallace's entry was the first in the world to pass that mark, at 2,009 pounds.

The formal opening will take place the following morning, Saturday, Sept. 29, when the Grand Parade kicks off from Topsfield Common at 9 a.m., with fire engines and local high school bands. After they have made their way to the fairgrounds on Route 1, opening ceremonies will be held at 10 a.m.

No matter how old the fair gets, there is always room for something new, and that would include this year's hot dog-eating contest, where anyone 16 and older will have five minutes to consume as many hot dogs and buns as possible.

The Human Cannonball will also fly 100 feet through the air on Arena Road, after being shot from the mouth of a giant cannon, while Johnny Rockett's Cycle Circus & Galaxy Girl will spin in dizzying circles on a platform way up in the air.

The fair will also celebrate two centuries by bringing back favorites like the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who create formations on horseback with amazing precision, and the Axe Women Loggers of Maine, who make chips fly as they chop and saw through stacks of logs.

But the events and displays that haven't changed since the fair began celebrate agricultural skills and know-how, which guarantee that life can go on. The Essex Agricultural Society has published a new book, "200 Years of the Topsfield Fair," which points out that the society began in 1818 "to promote and improve the agricultural interest of farmers and others in Essex County."

Those goals haven't changed, which is why the fair features contests for farm skills like canning, to preserve jellies, jams and pickles. There are also beekeeping contests, where people compete for blue ribbons, which are awarded to the best honey and beeswax products.

There is also a flower show at the Topsfield Fair, where all skill levels participate, exhibiting their beautiful blossoms in window boxes, wreaths and florist displays. Fruits and vegetables are judged for their health, and pies, wines and cookies compete for their flavor and aroma.

The fairgrounds house a poultry pavilion, where all kinds of chickens and ducks can be seen. There is also a barn with rabbits and cavies (which include guinea pigs);

a pig barn; and pens for sheep, goats and cows, along with several other species of farm animals. All of these are shown to judges by their owners and are also fun and educational to visit.

A-MAZE-ING ATTRACTIONS

A great growing season will make local cornfields extra fun to navigate this fall

By WILL BROADDUS
STAFF WRITER

It will be harder than usual to find your way out of a corn maze this fall.

That's because the cornstalks are taller than ever, thanks to a great growing season, so even the tallest people won't be able to see over their tops.

That is the report from Bobby Connors of Connors

Farm in Danvers and Mike Marini of Marini Farm in Ipswich. They both feature mazes in their cornfields.

"I have never seen the corn maze as tall and healthy as this year," Marini said.

"Two years ago, we had a drought, in 2016, and it was kind of low. But this year, the corn is 12 to 14 feet high."

Connors said that the weather has also been great for his apple trees, from which visitors can pick their own apples in the autumn.

"We have the best apple crop we've seen in years," he said.

Both farms opened their mazes on Sept. 8. Marini Farm will remain open until Oct. 28 and Connors Farm until Oct. 31.

Along with being unable to see out of the mazes, people will not be able to see the designs that they are walking through. These were cut into each field using GPS and are only visible from a plane.

"This year's theme is 'Crazy Train,'" Connors said. "That's our newest attraction. We put in a kids train here — actually it's for everybody. And just for a fun maze theme, we figured we'd put the train in, a picture of the train with dogs riding it."

On a sad note, the train, which runs around the farm and through the orchards, pays tribute to Connors' dog.

"The train is named after my dog, Max," Connors said. "He died last spring, so it's the Max Train."

Marini has turned to the world of literature and entertainment for the design in his maze this year.

"This year, it's 'Arabian Nights, Legend of the Lamp,'" he said. "It's a genie theme."

Marini's maze always features a game that visitors must play, which helps them work their way through to the exit, while providing educational lessons for children. Marini also offers a mini maze, which is less time-consuming and more appropriate for smaller children.

Both farms offer special events in their mazes, such as the Spookley Party on Oct. 6 and 7 from 1 to 3 p.m. at Marini Farm.

Connors Farm has a singles night on Oct. 6 and gets in the Halloween spirit with "Hysteria," a series of terror-tinged entertainments in the maze.

These include flashlight nights, where people can bring a flashlight or use the moon to get through the corn.

If that isn't frightening enough, Haunted Farm is a nightmare to remember that features scary actors and special effects in the maze.

"We have fireworks every Saturday night with live music," Connors said. "The night stuff is just as popular as the daytime stuff, so visit us day and night."

While Connors Farm has been around since 1904, Marini is celebrating its 90th anniversary this year, which is why that number is inscribed in Marini's maze.

Both farms plan to stick around much longer, with the help of entertainment options that bring in visitors as the harvest slows down. That's why, along with their corn mazes, Connors and Marini offer a slew of rides and entertainments that are continually changing and expanding.

"The corn maze is an attraction unto itself," Marini said. "As we do more and more, people want to spend time at the farm doing more."

Farms

Down on the farms

Locally sourced fun for the family

BY WILL BROADDUS
STAFF WRITER

Farm stands are as much a part of fall in New England as foliage. Not only do farms offer seasonal fruits and vegetables, but they also stock decorative pumpkins, flowers and greens to help people prepare for the holidays.

On the North Shore especially, farm stands often have a long history of sharing their bounty, which in autumn ranges from fruit wines to heirloom vegetables and pick-your-own apples. And farmers are saying that this has been a great season for apple crops.

Some farms also provide entertainment for the whole family with corn mazes, corn cannons, hay rides, and thrilling Halloween-themed events.

So whether visitors are shopping for local produce, planning a date, or searching for a family outing, visiting local farms is a natural choice in fall.

Fall for the arts

Entertainment opportunities abound all around the region

BY WILL BROADDUS
STAFF WRITER

Whether people like to spend their leisure time watching plays, listening to music or admiring works of art, there is always plenty of entertainment on the North Shore.

This fall, North Shore Music Theatre will continue its tradition of bringing top-notch productions of Broadway hits to its round stage.

Award-winning novelist Mona Awad will give a reading at Salem State University on Nov. 8.

Audiences can be thrilled by Dr. Jekyll's split personality in "Jekyll & Hyde" until Oct. 7. Shortly after, actors will take the stage for "Hairspray" from Oct. 30 through Nov. 11.

The bouffant 'dos will be followed by David Coffee appearing as Scrooge for the 25th year in "A Christmas Carol," which opens Dec. 7. Cheryl McMahon also will make her 25th appearance in this Jon Kimbell production.

The Flying Horse Outdoor Sculpture Exhibit, now in its ninth year, has grown into the largest outdoor sculpture show in New England, according to founder and organizer Judith Klein.

This year, she invited 47 sculptors to display 55 works on the grounds of Pingree School in Hamilton until Nov. 4. They include wood carvers from Mexico, a local artist with sculptures that dance in the wind, and a man from New York state who welds rockets and dinosaurs out of scrap metal.

David Coffee and Cheryl McMahon will both appear in "A Christmas Carol" for the 25th time at North Shore Music Theatre.

Me&Thee Coffeehouse in Marblehead opened its 49th season in the first week of September. The venue hosts talented, sometimes unheralded, acts every Friday night through Nov. 16. These include singer-songwriter Jim Trick, a local talent, who will appear on Oct. 19. He'll be followed by bluegrass band Mile Twelve on Nov. 9 and a trio of songbirds from Austin, Texas — Nobody's Girl — on Nov. 16.

The coffeehouse then takes a break before resuming Feb. 1 with Jill Sobule, who wrote a song called "I Kissed a Girl" long before Katy Perry used the same title.

Colleges remain vital members of the local arts scene this fall.

Salem State University's Writers Series will bring a range of talents to read on campus, starting with the bardic Sean Thomas Dougherty on Oct. 4. He will be followed by faculty member and award-winning poet Ann Taylor on Oct. 18 and, on Nov. 8, Mona Awad, who won Amazon's Best First Novel award for "13 Ways of Looking at a Fat Girl."

Artists Fred Lynch and Michael McLaughlin will explore landscapes in drawings and photos in their show, "A Sense of Place," at the campus' Winfisky Gallery beginning Oct. 10. Shahid Parvez Khan will play sitar at Salem State on Oct. 15. And Mary Chase's play "Harvey" will be performed

The Grammy Award-winning Parker String Quartet commands attention at Gordon College in Wenham on Nov. 2 as part of its Alton Bynum Recital Series.

Oct. 18-21 and Oct. 25-28.

Music is always on the calendar at Gordon College in Wenham.

After a Faculty Artist Series concert Oct. 5, the Alton Bynum Recital Series will be back Oct. 26 with Kevin McMillan and Gabriel Dobner.

They will be followed by Gordon Symphony Orchestra's Fall Concert on Oct. 27 and the Community of Song Intergenerational Choir Concert on Oct. 28.

The Bynum series will resume Nov. 2 with the Grammy Award-winning Parker String Quartet, and the annual Christmas Gala will put the holiday season in high gear on Nov. 2.

Marblehead

A picturesque walk through history

Standing at Fort Sewall, looking across Marblehead Harbor and out to sea, it isn't hard to imagine the pirate ships that threatened the town in its earliest days.

An imaginative visitor might also think of the USS Constitution, "Old Ironsides," slipping under the fort's protective guns on April 3, 1814, with two British frigates in pursuit.

It's also easy to think of family members of the sailors in Marblehead's fishing fleet, much of which was destroyed by a storm in 1846, who stood at this spot wondering if their loved ones would return from sea.

People don't always associate Marblehead with such dire moments, but it is a town in which nearly every spot gives rise to historical reflection.

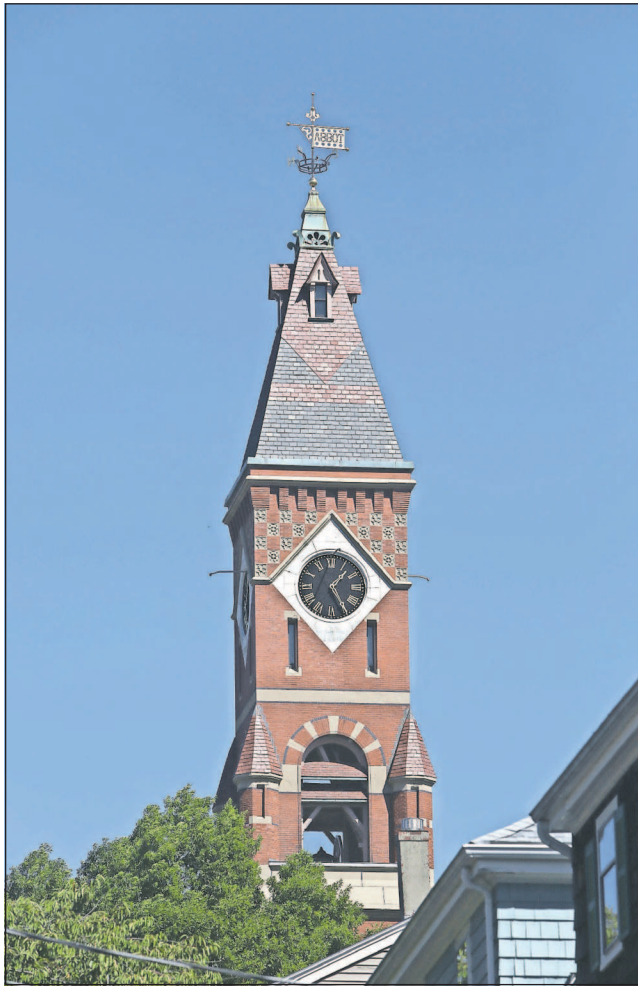

The Jeremiah Lee Mansion on Washington Street was built by the town's wealthiest resident in 1768, and even its wallpaper — recently restored — is original.

Lee supported the American Revolution and died before the war was won, but both the Marquis de Lafayette and George Washington were guests in his mansion following independence. Those are only a few of the facts that guides will share during a visit to this site.

The mansion is managed by the Marblehead Museum, across Washington Street, where the town's history is explored in regular exhibits.

King Hooper Mansion, also nearby, is now home to the Marblehead Arts Association, which hosts fascinating exhibits by members and guest artists.

It's even older than the Jeremiah Lee Mansion, having been built by candle maker Greenfield Hooper in 1728 and expanded by his son, Robert Hooper, a wealthy shipping merchant.

Abbot Hall, Marblehead's red brick town hall just up the street, was built more than 100 years ago and is home to one of the country's most famous paintings, "The Spirit of '76" by Archibald Willard.

Walking in the other direction along Washington Street, a visitor will eventually come to the Old Town House, built in 1727, where independence was debated before the revolution. The second floor houses a former Grand Army of the Republic meeting hall that serves as a museum.

These are the most conspicuous historical sites in Old Town, a part of Marblehead where all the buildings and even the crooked, winding streets evoke an era long past.

A trip along Ocean Avenue to Marblehead Neck allows visitors to see Old Town — and the spire of Abbot Hall — as part of one sweeping view.

It also allows them to admire the grounds of the Eastern and Corinthian yacht clubs, and the beautiful boats at anchor in the harbor.

Ocean Avenue leads visitors out to Chandler Hovey Park, where Marblehead Light stands, a metal framework around a central column that was erected in 1895 and is unique in New England.

This stark structure replaced the first lighthouse on that spot, a brick and wood tower that was built in 1835.

Ipswich

A town that blossoms in autumn

Watch fall come to Ipswich, and enjoy this rural, flora-rich town at its best. The lush green of summer gradually surrenders to the palette of late September, October and November. The vivid reds are out first and then the yellows until color is everywhere. The ocean hasn't registered the change yet, and waters off Crane Beach are still warm enough for wading. Apples are falling from the trees.

And that's only the beginning of the town's attractions.

There is an extraordinary amount of history to enjoy in Ipswich, founded in 1634. The town boasts the largest number of First Period homes (1626 to 1725) in the United States. That's not readily apparent because these 60 antique structures, found mostly in the downtown, are disguised as, well, homes, just regular homes with people living in them. Some have been updated, while in others, the owners work hard achieving a historic look.

Crane Beach and adjacent properties on the 2,100-acre Crane Estate are operated by the statewide Trustees of Reservations.

Want to see an American Downton Abbey? Castle Hill, home of the Great House where the wealthy Crane family once lived, was landscaped by the Olmstead Brothers more than a century ago. They transformed the terrain, creating gardens and the Grande Allee, a series of uniform, rolling hills descending to the sea. Tours are available. Nearby is the Crane Wildlife Refuge.

Paths allow visitors to walk about as if they owned the place.

Also under the care of The

A woman jogs down one of the many paths at Appleton Farms off County Road/Route 1A.

A tractor makes its way through a field at Appleton Farms.

Trustees is Appleton Farms off County Road/Route 1A. It's a great spot for riding, walking or purchasing milk and sausages. The cows and pigs are right there, so the food doesn't come much fresher. Tours don't require reservations, and there's a lot to do at all these sites.

Russell Orchards Farm Store and Winery and Greenwood Farms (also operated by The Trustees) are pleasing alternatives for the agriculturally minded. And for those looking to get lost, consider a visit to Marini Farm Stand and jaunt through the farm's corn maze. Animal lovers might consider Wolf Hollow, which offers a chance to view some of the less sociable — but fascinating — cousins of man's best friend. Another treat is the majestic Ipswich River, which broadens as it passes through the downtown and beneath the arches of the graceful 1764 Choate Bridge, one of the oldest bridges in the country.

Continuing down the river, the waterway meanders through marsh before emptying into the ocean at the entrance to Plum Island Sound.

The atmosphere in Ipswich is somehow ideal for enjoying the North Shore's signature dish — fried clams. And if you want something to wash that down, well, Ipswich is the Milwaukee of the North Shore, thanks to Ipswich Ale, which offers tours and tastings.

For those with more exotic tastes, there is the 1634

Meadery — mead is an alcoholic drink combining honey and water — and Privateer Rum, a name celebrating an Ipswich pastime that was not quite piracy and goes back to the Revolution.
